ZURO: 'His positivity rubbed off on his competitors'

it happened."

He cleared 5-foot-8 at MOC along with two other jumpers, but he completed the jump in fewer attempts. That mark isn't even his best. At a track meet with Houck Middle School in April, the 6-foot-4, 14-year-old cleared 6 feet.

Nick started competing in the high jump as a seventh grader at the encouragement of James Decker, a Whiteaker teacher and coach. Decker had seen Nick dunking the ball on the basketball court and knew he was onto something special because of his natural jumping ability.

"I just sort of watched the older guys at first and it looked really cool," Nick said.

In short order, he was making the leaps himself and besting his schoolmates in the event.

"From the first few practice jumps, Nick began progressing quickly. By the end of his seventh grade year, he was one of the top jumpers for his age in the nation. This year, as he got taller and stronger, his coaches and I could tell this could be season that he did something special," Decker said.

Nick grew a full inch between January and March this year. He credited Decker with helping him excel in the event.

"He taught me how to visualize my jumps," Nick said. "Between that and watching a lot of YouTube video (demonstrations) I was able to step it up."

Decker said Nick's character shows in aspects beyond the fields and courts.

"He works with our some of the special needs students at our school and is patient and giving when working with them. At the meets, he always rooted on other athletes and was always willing to talk to the other contestants about techniques, warm-ups or anything that might be asked. His positivity rubbed off on his competitors and teammates alike and made those around him better," Decker said.

While the accolades are pouring in from track and field, Nick said the training has helped him perform better in basketball, his first love.

"We do a lot of running as part of track and field and it's really helped. I feel like I'm in a lot better shape now," he said.

PORN: "We don't want people living in fear"

when or where the problem will arise."

Most often, the best defense against such individuals is simple awareness. Three weeks ago, a Claggett Creek Middle School student alerted school officials and the school resource officer to a man with a camera watching students as they walked to school. She made note of the vehicle's license plate and a large sticker on the windshield.

Within 24 hours, School Resource Officer David Zavala began patrolling the area and it resulted in the arrest of a 22-year-old Keizer man found to be in possession of images of child abuse and photos of students walking to school.

"The girl in that case did a very good job. She saw something strange and told someone about it. Something as simple as that can be very beneficial," Howden said. "The biggest thing is for parents to have a good awareness of who their kids are around, have good, open communication around the issues around sexual abuse, and to try to do it in a way that isn't alarmist. We don't want people living in fear."

Doug Lusk, Cynthia Witham, Terry Witham and Bo Nyleen, all members of local Rotary clubs recently took their Keizertimes to Hinche, Haiti, where the groups funded the drilling of a well. The "Wells in Haiti" project was created through the hard work of Cynthia Witham, Salem Rotary Club, who raised funds from local Rotary clubs in the Salem area plus a grant from Rotary International. To date Rotary has drilled six wells in the area and more are planned in the near future. The wells are vital to local citizens because Haiti not only suffered extreme damage from the 2010 earthquake, but was also devastated by a cholera epidemic in 2011 that resulted in 6,000 deaths. You too can have your photo in the Keizertimes. Simply take the paper to your destination, snap a picture with you and your group holding it, and send the photo along with everyone's first and last names to kt@keizertimes.com.

customers or vehicle occupants reported any injuries to the investigating officer. Video of the crash can be viewed on the Keizertimes Facebook page.

Keizer Police Officer Jeremie Fletcher determined that the vehicle was being operated by 22-year-old Cindy Rosas Ortega, of Keizer. Rosas Ortega, who is deaf, did not have a license or instructional permit and was reportedly driving a vehicle for the first time. She received a citation for operating a motor vehicle without an operator's license.

A passenger in the vehicle was identified as 27-year old Johana Gomez Ortega, of Keizer. Gomez Ortega received a traffic citation for providing a vehicle to an unlicensed driver.

Gomez Ortega told the investigating officer she was not able to tell Rosas Ortega how to stop the vehicle.

7-Eleven was open again for business by Sunday morning with boarded up windows and a temporary door.

Anyone having additional information about or witnessing this incident is asked to contact Keizer Police Officer Jeremie Fletcher at 503-390-3713 Ext. 3467.

Today in History

With protests for democratic reforms entering their seventh week, the Chinese government authorizes its soldiers and tanks to reclaim Beijing's Tiananmen Square at all costs. By nightfall on June 4, Chinese troops had forcibly cleared the square, killing hundreds and arresting thousands of demonstrators and suspected dissidents. The restlessness is symbolized by the photograph of a lone protestor standing in front of a line of military tanks.
