BRINK: 'It's beautiful wood and it has a story'

(Continued from Page A1) and go through their inventory," he said. "I'm working with one guy that his grandfather had some 50-year-old black walnut. I built him a couple of boards in exchange for some wood I could use to make boards for other people. Those are the great finds because it's beautiful wood and it has a story behind it."

The results are as much works of art as they are a mode of transportation. Many aren't even being used on the streets and instead act as decorations for nostalgic grinders. Nelson is okay with either one.

"A lot of guys my age were skaters and were part of that world. With these boards, I can put older guys on them and they feel sturdy, they feel secure, they're solid. Or, they can hang them," Nelson said.

He's had customers throughout Oregon and as far north as the San Juan Islands in Washington, which has become a point of pride for him and a reason to continue.

"It's rad. It feels rockstar," he said. "There are people collecting them now."

He's not planning on quitting his day job as an underground tunneler anytime soon, but the satisfaction he's reaping from the work itself buoys his spirit through the tougher moments.

"It's about making connections. Because of these boards, I feel like I can go out and represent myself and my work," Nelson said. "I can keep my spirituality flowing and I don't care what anyone says."

Nelson is currently accepting new orders for custom boards, contact him at 503-504-4807 to work out the details.
