Clark will seek second term

BY ERIC A. HOWALD
Of the Keizertimes

Some of the lessons from Cathy Clark's first two years as Keizer's mayor fill two notebooks.

They are the compiled notes, questions and ideas from nearly two years of her monthly Coffee with Cathy talks. Each month, she sets down stakes at a local coffee shop and invites residents of the city to come and share their concerns and ideas, and she's been keeping track.

“From the start, I wanted to be open and accessible to the residents of the city. I want to hear what people are thinking and I want them to be involved in problem-solving,” said Clark, who will seek re-election as mayor in November.

She was the only candidate to register for the mayoral race.

Clark served as a city councilor for eight years before being elected mayor, and said she's approached both jobs with the same attitude.

“I feel tremendously privileged to get to serve in this capacity. I truly feel like this is something I get to do, not have to do,” Clark said.

In some respects, Clark has already laid some of the groundwork for her next term. During the past several months, she has taken the lead in conversations about increasing funding for parks and police. Because property taxes are locked in at 1996 levels, city officials are exploring the possibilities of adding fees to utility bills for the specific purpose of creating dedicated funding for those two services.

“Keizer has always been about pride spirit and volunteerism and we have to decide what that's going to look like for the generation coming up.

We have to plan responsibly for the needs of the future,” Clark said.

One of the perennial goals of the council has been to determine the future of the Urban Growth Boundary Keizer shares with Salem. Past talks on the issue have stalled out more frequently than not, but Keizer is facing a housing shortage and an even more drastic shortage of local jobs. “We can't tell people that you can have a home, but you're going to have to drive for your job. We have a business community that wants to thrive and we want to build a kind of community where deep-rooted, sustainable business is possible,” Clark said.

To that end, Clark is hoping to incorporate changes in Keizer's development code that will pave the way for more diverse uses of existing spaces, such as workforce housing on top of retail spaces.

She said the Keizer Economic Development Commission has moved slower than some people would like to see, but its been necessary to assess the current state of affairs and the tools the city has available to provide activation energy for changes.

Clark would like to see KEDC develop a business retention and expansion plan that prioritizes future city needs, but its one of those projects that is going to require input on multiple levels and from people with already enormously busy schedules.

“Even on that front though, we've seen about six properties flip between Chemawa Road Northeast and Dearborn Avenue Northeast and that are all looking great,” Clark said.

Keizer city elections, as well as the national elections, will be held November 8.

Sept. brings painting, paper clay at KAA

The Keizer Art Association is having classes for artists of all mediums. Sept. 1, 8, and 15 will be watercolor with pen and ink. The class will be taught by Angela Wrahtz.

The class offers instruction on beginning to advanced techniques. There will be no experience needed.

Times are Thursday mornings from 9 a.m. to noon or Thursday afternoons from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. The class is $75 per three sessions.

On Sept. 7, 14, 21, and 28, drawing and water media will be instructed by Steve Kleier. Individuals will learn principles of drawing that can be used on their own or applied to painting. They will also discuss the principles of painting and how different media compare to each other.

This class will be held on Wednesdays from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. It will be $30 per class. It's $100 for every four classes.

Rogene Manas will teach paper clay fundamentals on Sept. 23 and 24. Paper clay is a fun, flexible and forgiving art form that lets people make art that jumps right off the page. The result is a wood-carved effect that leaves people wondering how it was made. This unique and innovative process is perfect for both beginning and advanced students.

The class is Friday and Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The cost is $185.

Weigh in on Keizer's bicycle friendliness

The City of Keizer recently applied to become a Bicycle Friendly City with the League of American Bicyclists (LAB), and now Keizer residents can weigh in with their thoughts on state of cycling in the Iris City.

Cyclists and non-cyclists are encouraged to take a brief survey at www.surveymonkey.com/r/KeizerBFC that help LAB officials determine just how bicycle friendly Keizer is.

The survey will take less than five minutes and asks for information regarding the frequency of riding, access to safe riding and what aspects of riding should take priority when considering improvements. The results of the survey will be shared with city officials in the form of a report card and used to determine what level of designation, if any, Keizer will receive.

The survey closes at midnight on September 15.

clarification

In an article titled Council outlines remedies for McNary parking overflow in the Aug. 19 edition of the Keizertimes, the article stated that residents have met with resistance in addressing the issue. The Keizer Police Department has responded to several neighbor complaints, and the resistance cited in the article had been around coming up with policy solutions at either the city or school district level.
