Council, parks board hash out next steps in parks fee progress

By ERIC A. HOWALD
Of the Keizertimes

The members of the Keizer City Council and Keizer’s Parks and Recreation Advisory Board met for a joint work session to discuss the future of parks funding Monday, Nov. 14.

At the request of Mayor Cathy Clark, parks board members have spent the better part of six months fine-tuning a survey intended for Keizer residents. The parks board approved a final draft last month and is seeking the council’s blessing to begin the work of putting it out to Keizer residents.

Parks board member Matt Lawyer provided a summary of the work to date and said the campaign theme to solicit input from Keizer residents will focus on three main topics: maintaining, matching and moving forward.

“We need to maintain what we have, match money we already have in system development charges (SDCs) and move forward with the Keizer Parks Master Plan,” Lawyer said.

The discussion after Lawyer’s presentation was wide-ranging. Members of the parks board are hoping to schedule presentations with a variety of community groups and businesses ranging from churches and senior centers and residences to youth groups and clubs like the Elks and Lions. Copies of the survey are expected to be included with utility bills and made available on the city’s website.

As the meeting unfolded, there was even discussion about whether to call it a survey. The two-page inquiry asks residents to prioritize specific elements of maintenance and new amenities and then asks what they would be willing to pay as a fee attached to their utility bill.

Councilor Mark Caillier said the final form of the survey resembled “homework” that might dissuade people from responding at first sight.

“Survey is a misnomer and we’re setting ourselves up for failure,” Caillier said.

Richard Walsh, a former city councilor and current parks board member, said the idea is to get people thinking about the issue on a deeper level than just saying marking “yes” or “no” in response to a fee.

“If they have the chance to see all the work that has to be done, they might consider supporting a fee,” Walsh said.

City councilors and parks board members all agreed that a substantial component of the path forward is educating residents on the need.

While the scope of the campaign to solicit input is still being formed, Clark said a heavy emphasis should be placed on social media. Dylan Juran, a member of the parks board, suggested creating videos with necessary background information and a call to action (responding to the survey).

There are five fee options: no fee, $2, $4, $6, and $8 per month.

The fee options would create a dedicated parks fund for continued maintenance and improvements. With a $2 fee, parks would get an additional $343,000 per year. At $8 per month, the fund would grow to more than $1.3 million.

The city council could add the fee to utility bills and it would not require a vote by Keizer residents.

That upset resident Judy DeSpain who attended the meeting.

“When you need more money, you will add more money. This will become a mechanism for getting money for whatever you want,” she said, and questioned what other methods were considered.

The parks board also considered bond measures or establishing a parks district to oversee Keizer’s parks. However, the former is inherently unstable and the latter would create additional costs.

City officials cannot raise property taxes to create the additional funding. Property tax rates are locked in as the result of ballot measures approved statewide in the 1990s.

When asked whether the parks board had an amount that they were recommending, Walsh said that was putting the cart before the horse.

“The parks board recommendation is that we get this survey out, we’ll make our recommendation based on the data we get back,” Walsh said.

Clark said success would likely hinge on clarity.

“The efforts like this one are successful when there is great clarity about what the money is buying. The clarity brings credibility, accountability and trust going forward,” she said.

The council may take action on the next steps to put the survey in front of residents by the end of the year.

First Citizen nominations sought

The Keizer Chamber of Commerce is seeking nominations for its annual First Citizen and Awards Banquet.

The annual event honors Keizer’s first citizen, merchant of the year and an educator or school volunteer with the Service to Education Award.

Nomination forms are available at the Keizer Chamber of Commerce office, 6150 Ulali Drive N.E., or by emailing info@keizerchamber.com. Nominations are due by Friday, Dec. 2. The banquet is slated Saturday, Jan. 21.

The First Citizen Award is given to an individual who has exemplified the city motto of “Pride, Spirit and Volunteerism” in their work, volunteering or activism.

The Merchant of the Year Award is given to the individual or business that did the most for the Keizer business community in the past year in regard to developing the current future workforce, promoting Keizer and/or advocacy for business and economic development.

The Service to Education

Award is given to someone who has been actively involved in and made outstanding contributions to the youth of Keizer. Nominees can serve, volunteer or dedicate time and talent.

WMS food drive Saturday

The Whiteaker Middle School leadership class, in partnership with Dayspring Fellowship, is hoping to provide 300 local families with a Thanksgiving meal, and they need Keizer’s help.

Students will seek to stuff a

Salem-Keizer School District bus with food Saturday, Nov. 19, in the Safeway parking lot at 4990 River Road N. Donations can be dropped off between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Suggested items include: turkey, stuffing, fresh potatoes, canned cranberry sauce, gravy mix, canned vegetables and fruit, apple sauce, cereal, oatmeal, juice, spaghetti, peanut butter, canned tuna or chicken, canned or dry soup and chili, macaroni and cheese, shelf-stable milk, rolls and pies.

Get up and run on Thanksgiving

Keizer’s fifth annual Turkey Dash 5K is scheduled for 8 a.m. on Thanksgiving, Nov. 24.

The race will start and finish at Lowe’s, 6225 Ulali Drive, and go through Keizer Station Village, then out and back in the Gubser neighborhood.

Pre-registration at the Keizer Chamber office or online at register.chronotrack.com/r/18669 is $27 for adults and $15 for those 11-and-under. Day-of-race registration, which begins at 7 a.m., is $37 for adults and $20 for youth.

Registration includes a sport tech shirt for adults and cotton t-shirts for youth. Finishers will receive a mug. Packet pick-up is Wednesday, Nov. 23 from 12-6 p.m. at the Keizer Chamber Office, 6150 Ulali Dr. NE.
