Total eclipse event taking shape

By ERIC A. HOWALD
Of the Keizertimes

Only one more box needs to get checked on a permit for an event planned around the total solar eclipse that will pass over Keizer in August 2017.

Organizers are still waiting for approval of an evacuation plan at Keizer Rapids Park before the final permits can be granted, but other elements are falling into place.

The topic came up at the Keizer Festivals Advisory Board (KFAB) meeting Monday, Nov. 28, with organizer and KFAB board member Sherrie Gottfried giving an update.

"I'm still worried about pulling it off and making it successful. I've produced large events in this community and it takes a lot," Gottfried said. "But we are moving."

Gottfried is coordinating the event at the request of the Keizer Parks Foundation, which plans to turn Keizer Rapids Park into a temporary camping ground for eclipse watchers the weekend before the eclipse itself.

Spaces at state parks in the path of the eclipse evaporated about an hour after being made available, and the Keizer Parks Foundation is hoping to turn Keizer's prime location into a benefit for the city's parks.

Early estimates suggest as much as $26,000 could be added to the city's parks budget as a one-time shot in the arm.

However, Gottfried said the event could cost as much as $30,000 to pull off. Organizers, including Keizer City Councilor Marlene Parsons, are hoping to get sponsors and the city to cover expenses.

"When we start discussing the budget for next year, I'm going to request that TOT (transient occupancy tax) dollars be used to offset the cost of police and fire district staffing," said Parsons. "That will make a huge dent in the costs."

Parsons is waiting for the final permit approval before approaching other potential sponsors.

Another hitch in the early planning stages is securing portable toilet rentals. Gottfried said other events, including the Oregon State Fair, which will begin later in the same week as the eclipse, have reserved the entire stock of locally-available portable toilets. She's reached out to vendors in Portland and Eugene with hopes of finding some.

In all, 117 spots will be available for a mix of RV and dry camping, but reservations are not yet being taken. Costs will be $75 per night for a dry camping site and $150 a night for an RV space. However, only four-night reservations will be available, resulting in a total cost of $300 or $600, respectively.

While the planning is still ongoing, Gottfried said there has been a side benefit of the work already completed.

"One of the purposes of this committee getting together was creating structure for planning events in Keizer. We now have that in place for Keizer Rapids Park," she said.
