minivan has since been located by investigators.

Investigators have identified both men seen leaving the bar with Martinez. One of them, 30-year old Jaime Alvarez-Olivera, is a person of interest in the disappearance.

Kuhns said police identified both men soon after Martinez vanished and have talked with one of the men, who is still cooperating with police.

"We released very little because we thought it could hinder the investigation. By identifying a person of interest, we believe it can give us the leads, facts and information to move this forward," Kuhns said.

Alvarez-Olivera was last thought to reside in the Woodburn area, however investigators have not been able to determine exactly where he resided or with whom prior to July 16. He was last known to be employed locally as a laborer who harvested berries. Identifying his residence or individuals he lived or worked with, or who may have known or associated with him could be very important to the ongoing investigation.

"He worked for a labor firm and he would call in and find out where to report each morning. His location and co-workers could change from day to day," Kuhns said.

Anyone who believes they may have information about where Alvarez-Olivera lived, whom he lived or associated with, or whom he may have worked with, or where he might have gone is asked to contact the Keizer Police Department at 503-856-3529.

Cynthia Martinez

Alvarez-Olivera is believed to have left the Marion County area on Sunday, July 16, a short time after Martinez was last seen with him. He has not been located and his whereabouts are unknown. Kuhns said investigators are confident he is no longer in Marion County, but could not say whether he might have left the country.

Alvarez-Olivera has prior arrests stemming from illegal harvesting in Lincoln and Benton counties.

Since the initial report, KPD officers have devoted more than 1,000 investigative hours to the case and are being assisted by members of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), the Oregon Department of Justice, the Marion County District Attorney's Office, and other local law enforcement agencies in both Marion and adjoining counties.

Martinez is Hispanic, 5-foot-3, with long black hair and multiple tattoos. Two on her chest read "Dominguez" and "Trust No One."

The Keizer Police Department is asking anyone who may have information about the disappearance of Cynthia Martinez to please come forward. Those who wish to remain anonymous may do so.

everyone involved, said Dawn Hunter, child welfare program manager for DHS.

"If we can get all the information we need off one interview, it's better for kids and better for families," Hunter said.

The idea for the program sprouted from conversations between Hunter and Det. Chris Nelson, who are both part of a multidisciplinary team at Salem's Liberty House. Liberty House provides free medical screening in cases of suspected abuse and neglect.

Nelson told Hunter that when he was working drug investigations in years past, the team had a dedicated case manager they worked with and the relationship was highly beneficial. They took the idea back to their respective agencies and Manriquez and Roeder soon had new desks at the Keizer police station.

"When it started we didn't know what to expect. We weren't sure if our case managers would be just checking in at the front desk and then working somewhere else, but KPD has been very gracious," Hunter said.

CPS case managers are often the first contact for children and families when suspected abuse is reported. Manriquez and Roeder might work with a family for an average of six weeks before closing out a case or making the decision as to whether alternative housing or long-term assistance is needed for children.

The closer communication between case managers and detectives, as well as patrol officers, has helped in some expected ways and even more unplanned ones.

Within the department, case managers and officers are learning how each agency conducts interviews and what they are looking for when contacting a person.

"We have greater confidence in each other's interviews because we've done enough of them together," Roeder said.

There is also greater information-sharing, which can make a huge difference in helping a child or family in crisis. Having deeper roots in the department means Manriquez and Roeder can put a face to an officer name on a police report and seek out additional information when needed. When reports come into one agency and the other is familiar with the family from past encounters, that information is shared as well.

"We've also had situations when KPD is executing a search warrant and they expect to find kids in the home. We can talk about what we're expecting before the search warrant is served and go with them to talk with parents on the scene about options if it turns out that we need to find somewhere else for the children," Manriquez said. "That is usually much easier on the kids."

While the stereotype of DHS work is taking children from their families, Roeder and Manriquez said the number of times when that's necessary is surprisingly low.

"We can talk about what we're expecting before the search warrant is served and go with them."

— Tristina Manriquez, Case Manager, DHS, Child Protective Services

It's also common for officers to call on Roeder and Manriquez when talking with families at the police station. Without the case managers' presence, an officer would have to call a hotline number and then wait for the next case manager to come available. Both case managers had worked those kinds of shifts before coming to KPD.

"Before this, I might travel from Keizer to Mill City to Stayton to Brooks," said Roeder. "I feel lucky to be in Keizer because I'm never going far and I can swing by and check in on other families when I am looking in on someone else."

One of the more unexpected benefits is the reception by the larger community. Roeder and Hunter both heard from school administrators who are relieved when a familiar face shows up at the school once a report is made.

"That wasn't a benefit that was even on my radar when we started this program," Hunter said.

Because the program paid such rapid dividends, Hunter said Marion County's 36 CPS case managers are now being assigned geographically rather than traversing the county on a sometimes hourly basis.

As the program continues, Roeder and Manriquez said mentioned a benefit that is more intangible.

Keizer Police Department is understaffed for a city of 38,000 people, Manriquez and Roeder take on three to five new cases each week. Both roles often require long hours with occasionally traumatic work that creates mental burdens not easily shared with loved ones.

"At the end of the day, when we've had a rough case, we can sit down with the officers and debrief and move past it together," Manriquez said.

"Over time we've built good relationships. There's laughter and humor in addition to the rough stuff, and that has been so helpful when there are hard cases," added Roeder.
