‘A prevailing and tragic crime’

Council updated on impacts of domestic violence

By ERIC A. HOWALD
Of the Keizertimes

A trio of local community members spoke to the Keizer City Council about the continued efforts to end domestic violence at its meeting Monday, Oct. 15.

District Attorney Walt Beglau, Deputy District Attorney Kim Larson and Jane Downing, executive director of the Center for Hope and Safety (CHS), talked with the council as Mayor Cathy Clark declared it Domestic Violence Awareness Month.

“We have teamed up for years that it continues to be a prevailing and tragic crime day in and day out. These range from shoving and pushing to murder. I have an entire team of deputy district attorneys to manage 1,000 cases of violence,” Beglau said.

The number of cases merits a “continuous and unrelenting dialogue about domestic violence in our community,” he added.

Beglau also complimented the efforts of the Keizer Police Department in regard to combatting domestic violence. Nearly 80 percent of domestic violence cases forwarded to the district attorney’s office result in filing of charges against the aggressor.

“The chief and his staff are doing an extraordinary job of investigating and giving us cases where we can hold people accountable,” Beglau said.

Downing said efforts to expand access to the CHS prove that the problem isn’t going away.

“We opened an advocacy office in downtown Salem two years ago. In the first year, we doubled the number of contacts from people needing our services. They doubled again last year,” Downing said.

Last year, CHS had more than 22,000 contacts from domestic violence victims between offices in Salem and Woodburn.

CHS recently opened a new shelter and is now working on a capital campaign to add kennels for domestic violence victims whose pets also need shelter.

Larson, who heads a victim assistance team within the District Attorney’s office, said efforts have focused on two areas: training and advocacy.

Staff from the victim’s assistance team have trained police on the best investigation techniques and local faith leaders on how to access support services when a “We’ve also worked hard recently to shore up what we do with victims who desire restraining orders,” Larson said.

Victims can now choose to appear in court with an advocate at their side or even

The team has also recently added a juvenile advocate for families with children that are experiencing domestic violence issues.

SKSB opposed expansion of GVC into Bend

By HERB SWETT
Of the Keizertimes

The proposal by an Oregon School Activities Association committee to put the 6A high schools in the Salem-Keizer School District in the same league with three high schools in Bend brought a negative recommendation from the Salem-Keizer School Board on Tuesday, Oct. 10.

In the general opinion of the board, travel over the Cascade Mountains, especially in winter, would hurt athletes academically and be dangerous in snow and ice. Director Jim Green said that when his daughter went to Redmond for a game last year, she did not return home until 2 a.m. the day of a test.

Paul Kylo, the board chair, cast the one vote against the resolution. He said that there should be a positive solution to the problem of few 6A high schools in central Oregon and that he had not heard of one.

OSAA officials voted 10-1 Monday, Oct. 16, to place the Bend-area schools into the Greater Valley Conference.

In other business, the board approved six grants, including one of $13,072,524 from the Oregon Department of Education to supplement district resources to ensure that schools with high percentages of poverty meet state academic standards.

Other grants from ODE are in the amounts of $1,485,760 to develop a strong freshman advisory and $176,482 to supplement federal programs for neglected and delinquent youth.

The remaining grants are $133,370 from Business Oregon to continue environmental assessment work at the Career and Technical Education Center, $12,000 from Achieve 3000 to provide instruction for nonfiction reading and writing, and $1,000 from the Oregon Community Foundation to buy assistive music equipment and train student mentors at Waldo Middle School.

Eric Richards, director of student services, spoke to the board about a staff proposal on special education, which has the goal for students receiving special education services have the same opportunities as their non-disabled peers.

The board proclaimed the week of Oct. 15-21 as the 20th annual Hands and Words Are Not Hurting Week. It also proclaimed Nov. 15 as National Education Support Professionals Day.

Personnel actions approved by the board included the following in the McNary High School attendance area:

- Temporary part-time teaching contract for Ashley Swanick, Kennedy Elementary School.
- Temporary full-time teaching contract for Ashley Stickles, Gubser Elementary School.
- First-year probation full-time teaching contracts for Jaela Dinsmore, Keizer Elementary School, and Stephanie Meeks, Gubser Elementary School.
- Resignation of Kelsey Jaeckel, Cummings Element-tary School.

• Changing status of Tracy Larimer, social studies teacher, Whiteaker Middle School, from contract full-time to contract part-time.

Theft from medical marijuana grow near McNary High raises questions
Police received a call on the evening of Sept. 15 from some teens near McNary High School. They said they had gotten into a verbal confrontation before the neighbor chased them off with pepper spray. They said they could smell marijuana coming from the property. Police questioned the men at the house and found out people in the house grow marijuana for several patients who carry Oregon Medical Marijuana program cards.

McNary routs South Salem 47-0
South Salem’s recent dominance over McNary is over, thanks to a 47-0 trouncing Oct. 10. “I thought it was going to be a battle. I was surprised,” Celt lineman Ryan Belcher said. McNary linemen and linebackers harassed South’s quarterback all evening, intercepting two passes, tipping several more, and sacking the sophomore four times before the Celt starters were pulled in the second half.

McNary remains undefeated
The McNary volleyball team kept the rest of the Valley League chasing its perfect record last week with two more wins. The victories pushed the Celtics to 12-0 in league play. The Celts played a tough match Thursday against the McKay Royal Scots in Salem. The Celts began having trouble in the first game with serve receiving and passing difficulties.
