not intended to be the sole source of food for clients, the boxes might help a family get through several days.

To help provide core foods and extras that not every food bank supplies, McCormack has turned his focus to financial contributions over canned and boxed foods.

"If we get a can of soup, we give away a can of soup. If we get $1, we can make it work three times," McCormack said.

Through a partnership with the Marion Polk Food Share, the food bank pays about .30 cents on the dollar for items bought in bulk.

The Keizer Community

Food Bank was also recently approved for bulk purchases through Dollar Tree. While items still cost $1, it means a bigger bang for those 100 pennies.

"We can buy a 62-ounce container of laundry detergent for a buck. We've also purchased pet food in 16 ounce boxes that will get a family through a few days," McCormack said. Such items are rarely donated through other means and can take some of the stress off a struggling family.
