Abbie Hawley made sure McNary got off to a fast start, scoring seven points in the first five minutes, as the Lady Celts defeated Sprague 59-40 on Friday, Jan. 26.

"I had a lot of intensity in my head and I knew that we needed to win this game," Hawley said. "I was trying to play as hard as I could. I think we were just playing really good as a team and that was our goal today was to play as a team."

Hawley broke open an 8-8 tie on a 3-pointer with three minutes remaining in the first quarter.

Kailey Doult then scored six straight points to give McNary a 17-8 lead heading into the second period.

"We cannot feed off our offense because we're not always going to be shooting well," McNary head coach Elizabeth Doran said. "Right now that's kind of what happens with us. We hit a couple of shots and we start playing better on both ends of the court. I wish it was the other way (feeding off defense) but that is how it works."

Leah Doult and Paige Downer each knocked down a 3-pointer to stretch the Lady Celts lead to 23-11.

McNary lead by double digits for the rest of the game.

Sprague closed the first half on a 5-1 run to get within 30-19 at halftime. However, the Lady Celts answered with eight straight points to stretch their lead to 38-19 with 4:58 remaining in the third.

Kailey Doult, who picked up her third foul with 3:55 remaining in the first half, finished with 23 points in limited action to lead McNary. Playing with four fouls, Doult scored eight points in the fourth.

Hawley added 12 points. Downer scored nine points on three 3-pointers. Leah Doult also finished with nine points.

released in October, 2016, a year before the executive board made its final decision, and had all six Salem-Keizer schools, including North Salem, in a league with Bend. The committee proposed 19 drafts over the year and all updates were emailed to every superintendent, athletic director and principal in the state. The drafts were also posted to the OSAA Website.

"We wanted people to get the information," said Weber, who also noted that more than 200 people from all areas of the state at both small and big schools testified in person at one of the public hearings.

Salem-Keizer superintendent Christy Perry talked about the student poverty in the district and that extra travel would be another barrier for students to get a diploma. She pointed out that many student athletes struggle to pay any fees and don't have access to private lessons. But Weber and Radmacher noted that schools with free and reduced lunch had the opportunity to move down a classification. North Salem did. McKay did not.

Perry argued that poverty wasn't just a McKay issue, pointing to the 41 percent poverty level at McNary. She said athletics "keeps students in school and get them across the (graduation) stage."

Salem-Keizer said that each of its schools would make around 58 trips to Bend each year. Using charter buses, due to the bus driver shortage, that would cost the district $2,000 per trip. The district is also estimating $14,280 per school for substitute teachers while coaches who also teach miss class time to travel with their teams.

To lessen the amount of trips, Weber showed a sample of creative scheduling the OSAA received from Bend athletic director Dave Williams. Under the example, sports like cross country, track and tennis that have a state qualifying meet at the end of the season wouldn't play a league schedule. Williams estimated a total of 136 trips from Bend to Salem-Keizer for all three Bend schools.

OSAA said it took a 30,000 foot view with classification, doing what is best for the entire state. According to Dan Smith, who runs oregonprepsports.net, 10 leagues across the state would travel more than Salem-Keizer and the travel time for the entire state was less than a minute increase on an average trip of 1:15.36 to 1:16:32 from the last four-year block.

Curt Schelley, superintendent of Grant school district in John Day and chair of the classification and districting committee, said his teams travel six hours one-way for league games and were able to maintain a balance of academics and athletics.

"We have high poverty and kids that live 40 miles from the school and haven't been negatively impacted," Schelley said. "We often look through lenses of our own school districts and we have blinders on because we want to benefit our own district."

Dr. Julie Bingham, a clinical psychologist in Salem, whose daughters play soccer and run track at South Salem, spoke of the dangers of traveling to Bend on the Santiam Pass. In a letter she received from the Oregon Department of Transportation, she noted that there were 1,419 crashes on the pass from 2011-2016 and 33 fatalities.

Bingham also pointed to a letter from the Medford school district sent to the OSAA about the dangers of traveling to Bend but a graph showed only 926 incidents between 2013-17 and one fatality. She noted the driver of a tanker truck who crashed and died on the Santiam Pass in December.

Schelley, who coached basketball at Summit, countered by saying he valued the trips over the Santiam Pass to Salem more than trips south over highway 97 or through Mt. Hood because they were closer and the roads were better maintained.

Salem-Keizer also asked why OSAA chose a six-class system when the committee previously stated that a five-class system would have less traveling.

Schelley said while a five-class system did decrease travel for some schools, it increased it for others. When athletic directors from across the state met for a conference in Sun River, directors from 1A to 5A schools overwhelming wanted a six-class system while those in 6A chose a five-class system.

"No school or student should be given more priority than another school or student," Schelley said. "Were' trying to do the best we can to make sure this is the best system for the state or Oregon."
