The influx of talent has brought more competition.

"We go into every year just saying it's a competition and you've got to work hard to earn your spot," Wise said. "We just leave the door open. If a younger kid comes in and takes your spot, that's what it is. "The only things we know for sure are Faith pitching and Courtney catching. Haley Ebner is probably going to be at first again and Nadia at center. But other than that, you've got to compete."

The Lady Celts will find out how good they are early when the team that knocked them out in the state quarterfinals last season, Oregon City and All-State pitcher Morgan Hornback, come to McNary on March 23.

"I felt like if we would have played them 10 times, we probably would've beat them eight of 10 times, but it just wasn't our day," Wise said.

"I think they've already circled that one on the calendar. They're ready. They want that one back. But let's take care of those games before that and then we can worry about them."
