For Whiteaker Middle School eighth grader Alyssa Hodges, the events that led to student walkouts at schools across the country had a personal impact. Her cousin, 14-year-old Martin Duque Anguiano, was one of 17 students and staff gunned down at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida, a month ago.

“To me this was a big deal because not only did 17 people lose their lives, their families were impacted,” Hodges said. “I wanted to bring out that this is something that could have been prevented.”

Students at both Keizer middle schools and McNary High School participated in student-led walkouts March 14 meant to memorialize the victims of the latest mass shooting at an American high school and advocate for change to make schools safer.

Hodges joined three fellow student leaders in memorializing the victims over in the parking lot at Whiteaker. In addition to telling the participating students – maybe a third of the student body at the school – about her cousin, Hodges called on everyone at the school to do what they could to change the circumstances for students who feel lonely and alienated.

“Think about what would have happened if people had been nice to him (the shooter). It might never have happened if people had listened to him when he needed it most,” Hodges said.

Paris Boyd, another eighth grader at Whiteaker, led students out of the building and was the first to speak to the crowd over the megaphone. Boyd and the other organizers read obituaries and scoured social media to compile brief biographies for each victim of the shooting. After reading each name, the Boyd, Hodges and others described the interests and work of those who were killed.

“People who were innocent died for no particular reason and I wanted other students to acknowledge what a big deal it was and that it was horrific and terrible,” Boyd said. “I’m afraid that people are going to forget about it, and the people who were killed, in a month or two. I don’t want people to think ‘Oh, well, it’s happened again.’ It’s not some thing that should be happening.”

Asked whether they feel safe within Whiteaker itself, both responded they

Robbery suspect shot and killed

Details remain scant in an officer-involved shooting that took place in Keizer Wednesday, March 14.

A suspect, later identified as Ryan Chapman, committed an armed robbery at Pizza Hut, 4492 River Road N., was shot and killed after confronting Keizer Police Department’s Officer Tyler Wampler on Springtime Court Northeast. Around 6 p.m., Keizer police responded to the business on a report of a robbery in progress. The suspect fled the scene in a red Hyundai and a pursuit ensued after police located the vehicle. The suspect crashed into white Nissan Sentra near the intersection of Chemawa Road Northeast and then fled on foot north on Springtime.

A confrontation occurred that led to a Keizer officer shooting and killing the suspect on Springtime Court. Wampler was not injured. By 7 p.m., a mobile crime lab was already at the scene and officers from KPD and the Oregon State Police appeared to be reconstructing the scene with use of a drone.

Meth blamed in naked arrest

A 41-year-old Keizer man told police he used methamphetamine and was looking for his clothes at the time of his arrest for peeping in windows in west Keizer.

Keizer police arrested Martin Allen McCord in his birthday suit after watching him – while waiting for back-up – pleasuring himself and peeping in at least one window. It was the second time in roughly five hours that police had been called about suspicious activity in the area.

Police were summoned to the 4900 block of Elizabeth Street North about 11 p.m. on Saturday, March 17, but were unable to find a prowler reportedly on the caller’s back porch.

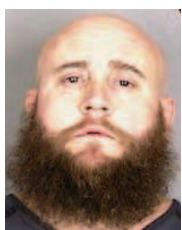

At 4:27 a.m. on Sunday, March 18, police received a report of a prowler in the 400 block of Janet Street North.

When an officer arrived on the scene, he spotted the suspect lying on a porch in the 4900 block of Filmore Street North.

While waiting for back-up officers, the officer already on the scene saw the
