

Chamber volunteers on to new adventures

By ERIC A. HOWALD
Of the Keizertimes

For the past two years, McNary High School seniors Jordyn Maret and Amanda Patton have been regular fixtures around the Keizer Chamber of Commerce.

Since their junior year, both have taken part in the Salem-Keizer Youth Leadership Program, which is something like an apprenticeship offering high school students insight into the inner workings of leadership in the local business community. It was eye-opening for them in more ways than one.

"I always try to stick to a plan in school and it gets frustrating when I have to change it, but seeing that same thing happen with a giant group of adults was really reassuring," Maret said. "Not everything always ends up as planned and changes always have to be made."

The pair spent the first year of the program attending informational tours alongside members of the Salem Chamber of Commerce, like learning about the justice system by touring a prison and speaking with a judge at the Marion County Courthouse. During the past academic year, the two worked more closely as part of the organizing force behind projects like KeizerFEST and the Festival of Lights parade.

"I grew up watching the parade and going to the Iris Festival itself and I had no idea how much work went into that," Patton said.

Patton's assignment with the Keizer Chamber included attending the monthly meetings of the chamber board, which was where she got to see how some of the information collected on expeditions like tours gets turned into action.

"I was surprised at how much everyone had a say in everything. It wasn't just one person telling others this is what's going to happen, everything was voted on and there was a lot of discussion," Patton said.

Maret was assigned to the KeizerFEST committee, but joined the Festival of Lights committee on her own initiative.

"Mostly, I was listening and learning and it became my job to a bunch of McNary kids to carry banners. It also made me more prepared when I jumped into the KeizerFEST planning committee," Maret said.

She said the KeizerFEST committee got more interesting as the actual festival days approached.

"People would come into the committee meetings and ask about problems they were having. We would work with them and try to get through their problems together," Maret said.

In most cases, the parties reached a friendly resolution, but others were harder to accommodate, she said.

Next fall, Patton will be attending Pacific University where she plans to major in psychology. Maret is going to work on some core credits at Chemeketa Community College and hopes to transfer to Oregon State University.
