Committee may look at new standards for Keizer streets

The Keizer Traffic Safety, Bikeways and Pedestrian Committee held its most recent meeting Thursday, Nov. 8. Here is what was discussed:

• Committee members telegraphed a larger discussion on deck for its December 11. The committee will discuss the possibility of recommending the city adopt new road development standards.

The city currently uses American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials (AASHTO) standards, which emphasizes automotive transportation. The National Association of City Transportation Officials offers a different take on road design with an emphasis on multimodal (especially bike) transportation.

NACTO's manual provides instruction on creating treatments street improvements, such as protected bike lanes, transit-priority streets, and parklets. AASHTO's doesn't.

NACTO's guide might also prove useful as city leaders ponder revitalization of River Road North and Cherry Avenue Northeast.

• The meeting featured updates on ongoing projects including additional wayfinding signs along the bike path adjacent to the Salem-Keizer Parkway and the possibility of new bike racks at McNary High School.

The bike racks at MHS are a passion project for Committee Member Hersch Sangster, who used the same racks when he was a student at the school in the 1970s.

"We want to work with CTEC to make 10 to 20 racks at a cost of $85 a piece.

There is a small community at the school working toward it and we already have about $1,200," Sangster said.

Sangster said the only stipulation, aside from waiting for bond construction to be completed, is that the racks be McNary blue.
