

Rickman Garden may get new name

By ERIC A. HOWALD
Of the Keizertimes

Peggy Moore was determined to get the Keizer Parks Advisory Board to scuttle an effort to rename the Rickman Community Garden after her and her husband, Jerry.

After telling the board how much she and Jerry enjoyed making sure people are fed and teaching others about gardening, the reviews of her performance were unforgiving.

"You're doing a really bad job of talking us out of it, but that's why we all want to see it happen," said Matt Lawyer, who nominated the couple for their years of involvement at the garden.

"We just don't want people to think we are taking ownership of it," said Peggy in a last-ditch effort to knock the train off the track.

Parks board members were unswayed and forwarded a recommendation to the Keizer City Council to rename Rickman Community Garden to the Peggy and Jerry Moore Community Garden.

To say the least, the Moores' efforts at the garden have not gone unnoticed. The couple were some of the earliest gardeners at Rickman even before they took over as directors.

Since taking over, garden improvements haven't stopped. Jerry has built raised beds for some of the elderly gardeners, the couple fundraised for and enlisted volunteers to put a fence around the garden to keep out pesky neighbors, and the latest project is the installation of solar panels on a shed that will power heaters for a donated greenhouse year-round.

Within the garden, the Moores secured donations of soil and additives to create garden mixes for every plot, turned donated wine barrels into community herb gardens for all the gardens users and erected several community planters for items that would otherwise take up too much space in individual plots.

In addition to supplying fresh produce for the garden's immediate community, the Moores and other gardeners at Rickman have donated surplus food to local charitable organizations such as Simonka Place and Marion-Polk Food Share.

Despite all that effort, Peggy described the contributions as "a guilty pleasure."

The pleas to avert the action did not fall on deaf ears, but almost everyone said the couple was as deserving as anyone.

The Moores were cited for their leadership, dedication, and for the eye-catching nature of the garden since they became its directors.

"There are opportunities where the city can say 'thanks' and it can be uncomfortable, but this is to inspire the next generation to pick up your mantle as much as it is to honor your effort," Lawyer said.
