argues that while the district wants immediate possession to stay within its construction schedule, it did not provide any detail regarding the timelines and other hurdles, like permitting, that it needs to clear. As a result, according to the church, the district has not detailed what economic hardship would be endured without the immediate possession "as opposed to three months from now, or a year from now."

In a separate document seeking dismissal of the eminent domain claim, the church claims the request for ownership violates the Religious Land Use And Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA). That act states that the government cannot impose or implement land use regulation of "substantial burden" on the religious exercise of a person ... assembly, or institution." RLUIPA also mandates that governmental agencies wishing to impose such regulation prove a compelling interest and use the "least restrictive means of furthering that compelling governmental interest."

According to the dismissal request, Oregon courts have yet to determine whether RLUIPA applies to eminent domain cases, which means the process - and any appeals that arise - might drag on for a while.

In December, the church rejected an offer of $1.75 million for the six acres. The offer was about $200,000 more than the highest appraisal value.

Depending on the specific group or organization, Jackson is able to provide an undercurrent of consistency in otherwise high-turnover efforts, the McNary Grad Party being one of them.

Jackson started as an employee of the business she now owns, but said her community involvement is what's helped it grow.

"I didn't try to make it get bigger, it happened because I met people in the community and they would want our help, too," Jackson said. "That's my message as First Citizen: if you have an opportunity to give back, find a way to do it. The benefits far outweigh the few minutes you give."

Jackson lives in Keizer with her husband, Randy. They have two sons, Nicholas and Cody.

Juran was honored for his involvement in city- and chamber-based committees and for the Classic Homes team going the extra mile to design and build a playhouse that was auctioned off during the 2018 KeizerFEST to raise money for the Keizer Network of Women Giving Basket Program. Juran also led the recent redesign on the new Chamber of Commerce office on River Road N.

"Thank you for this and I appreciate the chance to work here in Keizer and work with the Chamber," said Juran in accepting the award.

Aicher is a longtime coach of Keizer youth and was commended for always giving extra time and attention to athletes beyond his involvement in boards and committees and contributions to major projects.

"This is a tremendous honor and an even bigger surprise. I've coached a lot of people who are every bit as deserving of this as I am," Aicher said.

Schmidgall, Shackelford's personal choice for the President's Award, is a driving force behind the scenes of KeizerFEST and decorating River Road North for the holidays. For more than a quarter of a century, Schmidgall has helped stage parades, erect the KeizerFEST tent and drive dignitaries along the parade route. He also mans the forklift that allows other volunteers to hang holiday ornaments from the streetlights along River Road North each year.

Schmidgall only reluctantly took the mic after having his name called. "Very unexpected. Thank you," he said.

Knifepoint robber sought

The Keizer Police Department is on the lookout for a suspect in the Jan. 8 armed robbery of a customer of the Quality Suites on Wittenberg Lane.

About 1:55 a.m., the victim reported having been approached by a white male approximately 6-foot tall and 185 pounds who demanded money while displaying a small pocket knife.

The victim left her room to have a cigarette in her car and was approached as she returned to the hotel.

The suspect was wearing a black hoodie with the hood pulled over his head and he had a black bandana covering his face. He took an undisclosed amount of cash from the victim and he was last seen running toward Carl's Jr.

Officers checked the area for the suspect and were not able to locate him. KPD's Criminal Investigation Unit has assigned a detective for follow-up.
