Today in History

In a major civil rights victory, the U.S. Supreme Court hands down an unanimous decision in Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, ruling that racial segregation in public educational facilities is unconstitutional. The Supreme Court ruled in Plessy v. Ferguson (1896) that "separate but equal" accommodations in railroad cars conformed to the 14th Amendment's guarantee of equal protection. That ruling was used to justify segregating all public facilities, including elementary schools.

time around. The kick-off party, which traditionally took place the Thursday night before the parade was bumped back five days and it made room for a Family Night at the main tent.

"Not every family can afford the wristband for carnival rides and food to go with it," said Bethell said. "If they can forego that and still feel out and about and part of the community, we're really open to those opportunities."

On Thursday at the main tent, families will find free games inside the tent and opportunities to check out different video gaming stations provided by Satellite Gaming.

Another big change will be expanded festival hours on Sunday for the first-ever La Familia Day. After the Teen Music Showcase ends, about 3 p.m., several local and regional Latino bands and performers will be highlighted on the main stage.

La Familia Day has been almost two years in the making, but Bethell wants it to be the start of something much bigger going forward.

"The big thing was noticing how many Latino families line River Road during the parade and then not seeing some of those faces in other festival activities," said Bethell.

Fan-favorite burger chain might open in late November

A Keizer Station In-N-Out location may begin construction as soon as June.

At a meeting of the Keizer Planning Commission on May 8, Keizer Development Director Nate Brown said the location could open as soon as late November.

A message from Jim Lockington, a new store development manager with the fan-favorite burger chain, to city officials confirms that the chain is moving ahead with its plans.

Lockington said that the chain's escrow on the property will close around May 17 and an on-site pre-construction meeting is planned for June 6 with construction commencing immediately.

"The floor plan that we are building on this site is a brand new floor plan. We recently did some internal coordination with our operations department and our go-to trade contractors and have made some changes to the permit-ready plans," Lockington said.

The Keizer location will be the third one in Oregon and the farthest north on Interstate 5 from the chain's California origins.

GROWTH: Redevelopment could help city absorb growth, create jobs

two potential paths: rework the development code to encourage more multifamily and infill housing types and job-creating spaces, or try to expand the Urban Growth Boundary (UGB) the city shares with Salem.

In either case, the city doesn't stand to collect any significant new revenue as a result.

"If all the redevelopment or new development were to happen at once, there would be about $1 million in new revenue," said Tim Wood, Keizer finance director. Most of that new money would have to go directly toward providing increased police or municipal services, both of which already operate in bottlenecks.

The council will have to balance that part of the equation with whatever it costs to reach the goal of accommodating new residents' needs. If the council opts to move forward with a UGB expansion, there is the potential for up to an additional $1 million in hard costs for staff time and legal bills while trying to wrangle approvals from other governing agencies.

Brown noted that the cost of all the studies to date have been covered by grants made available at the state level, there will be no such money to assist with expanding the UGB.

While the path to UGB expansion appears fraught, Brown also gave the council some relatively better news. By changing the development code and encouraging redevelopment at higher densities, Keizer could accommodate up to 5,700 new residential units and foster the creation of 6,000 new jobs.

Details on how that could be accomplished are still forthcoming, but Shane Witham, Keizer's senior planner, presented it as preliminary findings from a draft of a report heading for the Housing Needs Assessment and Buildable Lands Inventory later this month.

That forecast sounds rosy, but there is no market pressure to redevelop spaces in Keizer.

"In the near term, there is not a lot of likelihood of redevelopment, the current return along River Road is fairly stable and fairly healthy," Brown said. "The best way to invest is to focus on the long term. The market will put on more and more pressure. Retail tends to reinvent itself on a regular basis, but it is something you will have to consider."

The type of development also matters, added City Manager Chris Eppley, "Single family residences consume more resources than they pay for, multifamily gets closer [to breaking even]. If the shift were to more employment land, it would have higher value and personal property taxes that go to the state and pays for a lot of everything else."

The council isn't forecasting the route it will choose and isn't expected to make a decision anytime soon, but soon it will have much of the information it can hope to have before determining the city's next moves.
