

LABOUR,

under his belt has better prepared him for this level.

"I think he's more mature with his approach and he's more selective on pitches. He is staying within his zone, so when he gets pitches to hit, he's doing damage with them," Hallberg said. "When you play more, your strike zone awareness gets more refined. He's in a nice stretch here where he has a ton of confidence. It's really cool to see his development and progression." Labour echoed his coach's sentiment.

"It's been about maturing mentally. Having these long seasons and all these games, you get to a point where you know what you have to do to be ready. That is the main difference between how I am now and how I was two or three years ago. I was trying to do too much. I was trying to impress. But everything takes time. When you know what to do and you don't have to rush things, it just starts happening."

If you have been fortunate enough to see Labour blast one out of the Volcanoes Stadium this season, chances are you also might have noticed Keizer mayor Cathy Clark doing a happy dance from her seats on the first base line.

That's because Clark and her husband, Kevin, are Labour's host family for the summer, and they are taking great joy in the success of their "son."

"We cheer for him like a parent would because it feels like we're cheering for our own kid," Clark said. "He is a part of our family and it's been so fun celebrating with him in his success."

Over the last month, Labour has moved all the way up to No. 22 on the Giants top prospects list according to MLB.com. But Labour isn't thinking about where he'll end up next year, he's focused on ending the regular season strong and putting his squad in good position for the postseason.

"I try to not to pay attention to it because it can be something that gets you out of what you need to be doing," Labour said. "I'm just thankful for the opportunity and all of the support. I'm just trying to stay focused and play the game the right way. We still have to keep grinding. That's all I have on my mind right now."

"I've been driving the ball more in the air this year."

CELTS,

allowing Mucken to reach third on the play. An RBI-groundout by Shayn Tauer tied the score at 1-1.

Ready began to lose his command later in the frame, giving up three walks and a bunt single which put the Foxes up 2-1. But Ready retired the next two batters to get out of trouble.

Ready, who will be a sophomore in the fall, played on the Celtics freshmen team during the spring, but in his 5.2 innings of work, Ready showed that he might be prepared for varsity baseball next year.

"Logan is really reliable for us on the mound," Keeker said. "Every once in a while, he'll run into some command issues, but he has good stuff for his age. He's just a competitor. I know when I give him the ball, I can trust him with it."

After coming up empty in the top of the fourth, the Celtics had their best opportunity to tie or take the lead in the top of the fifth.

A one-out bloop single from Aicher got the threat started. Mayer struck out in the following at-bat, but Martin got aboard with an infield single, and both he and Aicher advanced 90 feet on a Silverton throwing error.

But with runners on second third, Olsen fell just short of his second homer of the game, flying out to the warning track in center field.

Ready got through the bottom of the fifth with ease, but in the sixth inning, everything fell apart for McNary.

Three Celtic errors in the inning led to five Silverton runs — only one of them was earned. Ready was replaced on the mound by Hayden Kaiser.

"They started to put the pressure on us and we weren't able to make plays," Keeker said. "That sixth inning really snowballed on us."

"Even though we didn't get the result that we wanted, we hope that these guys grow from it moving forward."

ATHLETE of the Week

presented by

DEIYERBERT BOLIVAR LHP, Salem-Keizer Volcanoes

The 23-year old from Venezuela has been the most reliable relief pitcher for the Volcanoes so far this season. In nine appearances, Bolivar has an ERA of 0.75 with 14 strikeouts in 12 innings of work.

Bolivar picked up his first win of the season on Thursday, July 18 against Boise, pitching two perfect innings in relief. He followed it up with his first save in his next appearance on Sunday, July 21, which helped the Volcanoes clinch the first half NWL South Division title.

KEIZERTIMES/Matt Rawlings
Logan Ready threw 5.2 innings for McNary, giving up two hits and two earned runs.
