Today in History

John F. Kennedy becomes the first U.S. president to have a direct phone line to the Kremlin in Moscow. The "hotline" was designed to facilitate communication between the president and Soviet premier. The hotline came in the wake of the October 1962 Cuban Missile Crisis, in which the U.S. and U.S.S.R had come dangerously close to all-out nuclear war.
— August 30, 1963

Food 4 Thought

"If... many influential people have failed to understand, or have just forgotten, what we were up against in the Cold War and how we overcame it, they are not going to be capable of securing, let alone enlarging, the gains that liberty has made."
— Late British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher

whether Zielinski is guilty, as Judge Armstrong stated "the facts, which are largely procedural, are undisputed," but how he will be charged and how long he will remain in jail. Using this expert testimony Zielinski can now use extreme emotional disturbance (EED), as a defense which, if successful, could reduce his crime from murder to first-degree manslaughter which has a minimum sentence of 10 years.

Zielinski's second trial began much like the first with the state's presentation of police reports, crime scene photos, evidence and officer's testimonies.

The state rested their case Monday, Aug. 26 after carefully laying the groundwork for a premeditated murder conviction through letters, documents and testimony from friends, family and co-workers, that Zielinski had previously threatened to kill his wife, was extremely jealous, had a violent temper, was verbally abusive and controlling. They painted a picture of a possessive man who was ready to explode.

The defense began presenting their case Monday, Aug. 26. Zielinski's counsel started laying the foundation for an EED defense by calling several Marine combat veterans who had served with the defendant during Desert Storm. The defense was expected to bring psychological experts in to testify after which they expect to rest their case.

CORN: 'I've been down 18-6 in a game and come back to win'

(Continued from Page A1) because softball doubleheaders and tournaments started taking a toll on the bodies of he and his teammates. He connected with another acquaintance, Joe Ross, who wanted to start up a cornhole league.

"I learned about it through tailgating down at OSU games," Ross said. "I started seeing cornhole boards, then I made some for myself. Pretty soon I wondered why we weren't playing when we weren't tailgating."

The Cherry City Cornhole League was born not long after. It started with 16 players, there's now 70 regular players with a waiting list, and Ross is considering adding a third night.

Modern cornhole evolved from older games and is played with two sets of bags, two boards and two to eight players. Competitors take turns trying to sink 6-by-6-inch bags in holes on the boards that are placed 27 feet apart. Points are scored by landing bags on the board (1 point) or in the hole (3 points). Players alternate between sides of the field and can cancel each others points by scoring ones of their own. The game ends at 21 points. The game took its name from corn that once filled the bags, but beans or plastic pellets took its place as players discovered the corn dust that built up on the boards and affected play.

The rules are relatively straightforward, but playing strategically begins immediately after deciding who goes first.

"If I'm right handed, I want to pick the right side of the board so I can throw over the center of the board. If my opponent is also right-handed, they'll have to throw at an angle," Wenning said. "That can dictate a lot of other things."

The ideal throw is called an "air mail," it's akin to swishing a ball in basketball and means the bag goes directly into the hole without sliding on the board. Players can also "bowl" bags into the hole by hitting lower on the boards and sliding them into the hole. Professional cornhole bags come with a slick side and a sticky side that can be key to blocking or sliding past opponents' bags.

While scoring points quickly is often the goal because it puts pressure on your opponent, the board becomes cluttered with other bags that players need to shoot around. Sometimes, it doesn't happen by accident.

"In tournaments where you can watch the brackets, you can scout opponents and see if they are shooting in a certain spot most of the time. If they are, you can put a bag in that location and force them to adjust," Wenning said.

There's also psychological warfare. Asking a competitive player "what their number is" can erect the a subliminal roadblock. The number in question is the one that the player most often gets hung up on during play.

"If someone says their number is 18, they might end up throwing five ends trying to get those last three points," Wenning said. "Ends" are cornhole lingo for throwing a complete set of bags from one side field before switching to the other.

While players can run hot and cold as in any other sport, Wenning said, the key is not giving up.

"I've been down 18-6 in a game and come back to win," he said.

The Cherry City Cornhole League meets Tuesdays and Thursdays at the Salem

Columbus Club at 725 Shipping Street N.E. Interested players can contact Ross through the league's Facebook page.

"We usually just try and get started around 6:45 and then I'll run a little after 9 p.m.," Ross said.

For those interested in dabbling in the sport beyond the backyard, the Shangri-La, a group that supports those with developmental disabilities, is hosting the fourth annual Capital City Cornhole Classic on Saturday, Sept. 7, from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Spectators are welcome and some limited spots are available to participate in the competitive and social divisions, there's also a number of slots still available in the newly-created youth division. Registration is available at www.shangrilaoregon.org.

Ashley Erb, community engagement coordinator for Shangri-La, said the goal this year is raising $10,000, but the event pays out in a variety of ways for Shangri-La clients.

"It's about people interacting with each other, who maybe wouldn't necessarily cross paths, and the understanding and awareness that happens through those interactions," Erb said.

In addition to the formal competitions, organizers set up an obstacle course that gives attendees a chance toss bags double the distance of a normal field or make an air mail shot. Completing challenges earns participants raffle prizes

Repair Fair slated Sept. 18

Marion County is partnering with the City of Salem and community "fixperts" to host a Repair Fair and Share event on Wednesday, Sept. 18, from 4 to 7 p.m. Experts will be on hand to fix items and to teach how to repair items.

Items to bring include jewelry, stringed instruments, textiles, small appliances, tools that need sharpening and computers. Guests are asked to bring replacement parts to aid in the repair.

The event is first come, first serve. Guests can bring two items for repair.

"Repair is good for economic development, our wallet and also the planet," said Jessica Ramey, the organizer of the event and a waste reduction coordinator for Marion County.

To sign up or learn more about this event, visit repair-fair.net. The fair will be held at Pringle Hall Community Center at 606 Church Street S.E. in Salem.
