championship events into the summer months. At press time more than 18,000 people had signed a petition for the OSAA to allow high school athletes the ability to have a spring sports season by extending the competition schedules into the summer.

However, Weber claimed that it would be hard to pull off a spring season in the summer months.

“There have been a lot of people that want us to shift competition into the summer. But we’re an education-based institution that are tied to the schools, so if schools aren’t meeting, why should we?” Weber said. “Plus, I don’t know how we would cover the staffing and personnel costs of running events into the summer. There are just too many potential issues that we would run into.”

— Peter Weber,
Executive Director, OSAA

“We’re hoping to get a little more information before we make our final decision.”

But Weber did admit that he could see typical summer events, passing league or summer basketball, to take place as scheduled because they wouldn’t be OSAA sanctioned events — even though they would involve OSAA teams.

The OSAA Executive Board is scheduled to meet once again on Wednesday, April 15. At that meeting, Weber said that it would “very likely” that the board would have a decision in place as to whether or not there will be a spring sports season.

“I hate to say that the board will for sure make a decision on April 15, but the main topic of discussion should be about whether we can have a season,” Weber said. “So much of what has happened is out of our control, but what we can control is how we respond. This whole process has been crushing for seniors, but at the end of the day, this is way bigger than high school sports.”
