to retain information and most teachers didn't know how to teach online," said another participant.

Additionally, more than 64% of participants cited that they didn't feel the school district has adequately explained what is happening in SKPS this fall.

Many of the parents reported some of the questions they still want answered.

There were multiple questions regarding the differences between the district's EDGE program — which is SKPS's new all-online learning academy — and Comprehensive Distance Learning (CDL), which will start as an online platform, then will have kids return to in-person class when it is deemed safe — due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

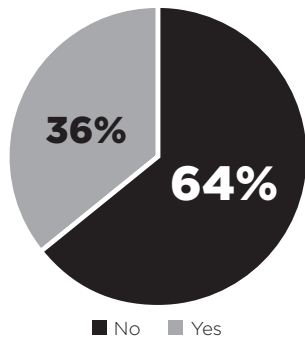

More than 66% of parents responded that they will be having their students participate in CDL, while 17.8% said that they would put their kids in the EDGE program.

There were also several parents questioning the logistics of having online school.

"I don't feel like we have enough info on the schedule, what topics will be taught, what extras we can do as parents to teach our children," said one of the respondents.

Another point-of-emphasis was regarding what (if anything) the district will do for parents that need childcare — in Oregon, kids under the age of 10 cannot be home alone.

"I want to know why they bothered doing surveys if they weren't even going to take into consideration homes where both parents are working full time," one commenter said.

"How are working families supposed to make this work? It was a struggle last time and I foresee it being harder this time," said another parent.

Just under a quarter of participants reported that the need for additional childcare would put a strain on their financial situation. More than 30% of parents also said that they have not yet figured out their childcare situation for the fall — 64.4% of participants said that they would not be needing childcare.

When asked how distance learning will affect adults with job/careers in their household, 20% said they wouldn't be effected, 33.3% said they would be able to make it work and 46.7% admitted that they currently don't have a plan.

Part of CDL's model is the expectation of family-supported applied learning at home. However, 46.7% of survey participants said that they feel like they could only support their students in some classes, while 26.7% said that they couldn't assist their students at all with their class work.

Parents were also asked how comfortable they were with their children returning to in-person instruction on a 1-5 scale, with 5 being completely comfortable and 1 being not comfortable at all. Only 26.7% of parents marked that they were not comfortable with their students going back to in-person classes. However, 46.7% said that they were completely comfortable sending their kids back to school.

Nearly all parents who participated in the survey reported concerns about the upcoming school year.

One parent said: "Aside from obvious academic concerns with online school, our students are being robbed of some of the most important things about high school: socialization, routine, sports, clubs, interaction with teachers and so many more."

Another participant expressed concern that her child "is going to fall behind and fail because we won't be able to assist the way that will be needed."

and a 2,000-square-foot quick-lube shop.

Building plans for a 7-Eleven in the southeast corner were included in the amendment and variance package approved by the council. On the same day that the council approved the master plan changes, 7-Eleven announced it was acquiring Speedway gas station for $21 billion.

A new traffic light will be installed at the entrance and exit point of the new development. The developer, RPS Development Company is including a 2,200-square-foot, interactive water feature in the southwest corner of the jug handle.

The changes to the plan actually reduce the footprint of the building slated for the site by about 1,500 square feet, from 19,400 to 17,800. With a wider variety in the services offered, the shopping center is expected to generate about 410 "trips" per day, an increase of about 40 trips over the original plans. The 4.2-acre site will also lose an estimated 14 parking spaces that would have been designated "Park and Ride" spaces between 7 a.m. and 5 p.m. as a result of the other changes.

"The primary reason for that is the world has changed a lot. We now have the transit center across the street. There might be some space to recapture those spaces south of the jug handle," said Shane Witham, Keizer's interim development director.

The vacant fields south of the jug handle are zoned primarily for light-industrial and office spaces. Eventually, the area south of Chemawa Road Northeast will be known as Chemawa Station.

The only person who testified regarding the change in master plans was Keizerite Mike DeBlasi.

DeBlasi suggested adding more trees to avoid the space turning into "a heat island." He also suggested putting in a roundabout instead of a traffic light to manage ingress and egress to the site.

Mayor Cathy Clark encouraged a conversation regarding a roundabout, but Keizer Public Works Director Bill Lawyer said it was not an ideal site for that sort of traffic control.

"We already see traffic backed up and a roundabout will complicate that. I don't think it would be functional in this setting," Lawyer said.

PLAY: Pandemic canceled traditional outreach

Keizer Parks Supervisor Robert Johnson said the city's desire to begin and complete the project in 2020 led to the canceling of traditional outreach efforts.

Renovations at parks throughout Keizer are being made possible by a $4-per-month parks services fee collected by the city.
