Netflix's Saqqara Tomb doc enthralls

BY T.J. REID
For the Keizertimes

Documentaries about the new and unexplored always bother me because I can never stop thinking about the silent, invisible, yet inescapable presence of the filming crew.

I have a tendency to look at the plausibility of every shot, questioning what is authentic and what is illusion for the sake of storytelling.

If a man is the first person to descend into a newly discovered tomb for the first time in a thousand years, for instance, then how did they get a shot of him doing it from the inside of the tomb itself?

When preoccupied with questions such as these, I usually forget to focus on the documentary itself and sometimes even get a bit annoyed at any perceived deception.

I did not often have this issue with Secrets of the Saqqara Tomb, however, because the earnestness and genuineness of the subjects involved and the masterful work of the crew fully sell the importance of the exciting new discoveries and make you feel like you are in Egypt with them instead of merely watching a film about their efforts.

Any time a discovery like this is made it is exciting for us as a species, but the experience is all the more poignant when the discovery is made by the descendants of the people in question. The tomb of Wahyte was found, unearthed, and explored by our subjects, a hand-appreciate Secrets of the Saqqara Tomb, as most of the relevant basics such as the mummification process and Egyptian afterlife beliefs get adequately covered as the need arises (accompanied by cute, simple, yet efficient animations of hieroglyphs come to life).

These discoveries and cultural lessons are spread out evenly enough that I never got bored despite the slow pace that is intrinsic to this type of film. Another factor that makes the two hours fly by is the fact that the documentary requires your full and undivided attention for one simple reason: most of it is, naturally, in Arabic. It is impressive how many of the people involved speak English, but when the rest are speaking (or if it's not a staged talking head), prepare to read a whole lot of subtitles.

Many mysteries remain at the site, and I'll be interested to read up on further discoveries as they develop. But for now, my Egyptian archeology itch is satisfied. And for once I'm not even wondering where the cameraman is hiding.

Secrets of the Saqqara Tomb is now available on Netflix.

ful of archaeologists, scientists, and excavators from Egypt in 2018, and their excitement and reverence for the site, as well as their disappointment when something breaks or an expected discovery fails to surface, is almost palpable.

The tomb (which is located in the titular Saqqara necropolis just 19 miles south of Cairo) and its story are uncovered piece by piece in the documentary, often making me feel like I was watching a very slow-paced murder mystery, albeit one that doesn't have the answer to every question and has a whole lot of archeology thrown in.

KEIZER COMMUNITY LIBRARY

A GEM IN THE HEART OF THE KEIZER COMMUNITY

National Giving Tuesday is December 1st For over 32 years, Keizer Community Library volunteers have generously given their time to assure Keizer has a library. We celebrate their generosity and we are proud to be part of a global movement that encourages people to do good and that inspires hundreds of millions of people to give, collaborate and celebrate generosity.

Have we really been closed for that long?

Yes, we temporarily closed our doors on March 16th in the interest of public health and to help prevent the spread of COVID-19. But we are still busy, finding ways to support our community. As a response to the pandemic, library volunteers found ways for patrons to continue to get books and movies, make donations and access information. Below are a few ways you can still use the library.

Curbside Pickup Patrons can view the library's on-line catalog. Pick the books you want to borrow and arrange for an appointment to pick them up by calling (503-390-2370) or emailing (info@keizerlibrary.org). Safety and sanitizing protocols are in effect and masked volunteers will meet patrons at their car or at the library door. The service is available on Mondays from 1 to 3 p.m. and Tuesdays from 4 to 6 p.m.. We can also take book donations on those dates. Good news! Library fines are waived until further notice.

Bag-O-Books It's like going on a blind date! For $5.00 you can buy a pre-selected bag of books with your choice of either fiction, non-fiction, romance, cooking, mystery or picture books for kids. Call or email to place your order and make a curbside pick-up appointment 503-390-2370 or email info@keizerlibrary.org.

Holiday Stories for Children Expanding the library's digital spaces has included adding a U-Tube channel for Story Time. Visit our web page at www.keizerlibrary.org to find 4 new holiday stories in December.

What's New in the World? Find out when you visit the library's web page and Facebook page featuring a variety of posts to entertain, educate and inform. Posts are curated for community relevance, featuring important information and resources.
