

Sam Jones to score from third.

In the top of the sixth, the Campesinos got an unearned run off Volcanoes pitcher Brenden Nipp. After being hit by a pitch, Collin Runge advanced to second on a balk, then stole third. Volcanoes catcher Brenden Barnes tried to throw out Runge at third, but the ball got past his intended target and went into the outfield, allowing Runge to score.

Nipp went five innings in relief for the Volcanoes and struck out seven while only giving up five hits, but in the top of the eighth, a clutch hit from Phillips tied the game at 4-4.

Phillips blasted a ball to the warning track in deep right field. Volcanoes right fielder Tony Holton initially looked like he had made the catch at the wall, but dropped it on the transfer. Much to Holton's dismay, the base umpire ruled it a no-catch.

Phillips came into third for a triple, but when the relay throw sailed past the cutoff man, the league's RBI and home run leader came into score, giving the Campesinos all the momentum.

"I have noticed that pitchers have kind of been pitching to me differently, throwing a lot of off-speed stuff," Phillips said. "I was thinking about hitting the ball to right center and letting the ball get deep, and it played in my favor tonight," Phillips said.

After Andrew Baxter came in to pitch a 1-2-3 frame in the bottom of the eighth, the Campesinos offense broke the game open in the top of the ninth.

Fernando Rosales got the threat going with a one-out, pinch-hit double, then advanced to third on an error from the Volcanoes. Chung came through with the go-ahead RBI-single moments later, which was followed by an RBI-double by Phillips, putting the Campesinos up 6-4.

"I think it was us just trusting our approaches and doing what we have to do as a team to score runs," Phillips said.

The Campesinos got two more insurance runs on a sacrifice fly by Runge and an RBI-single from Morrison.

"We had a lot of barrels early, they were just right at guys. But they stuck with it. They stuck with their approach and they stayed resilient," Robertson said. They don't take any pitches off."
