65,000 HIGH SCHOOL GIRL GRADUATES NEEDED FOR U.S. CADET NURSE CORPS

"NOW MORE THAN EVER!"

Additional Nurses Urgently Needed by U. S. Army

Tuition Fees and Spending Allowance Are Features Offered as Inducement

Many of the leaders in the field of professional nursing for Negroes will come from the 434 young women now enrolled in five collegiate schools of nursing, the U. S. Public Health Service, Federal Security Agency, announced this week. These young women, as members of the U. S. Cadet Nurse Corps, will receive a good basis for preparation for administrative, supervisory and educational positions in the nursing field, the Public Health Service said. Theirs will be the responsibility of providing the Negro nursing profession with an adequate supply of experienced instructors and supervisors.

The five collegiate schools of nursing—John A. Andrew Memorial School for Nurses, Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala.; Dillard University, New Orleans, La.; Meharry School of Nursing, Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn.; Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va., and St. Phillip's School of Nursing, Richmond, Va., offer four and one-half to five-year courses of collegiate and professional work leading to a bachelor of science degree in nursing.

Upon completion of two years of academic study, the young women are eligible to apply for membership in the U. S. Cadet Nurse Corps. As cadet nurses, they receive scholarships covering tuition, books, fees, maintenance and uniforms, plus a monthly spending allowance during 30 months of concentrated professional nurse education.

Hampton Institute is now recruiting students for its second collegiate course starting September 15. Miss Cecile Authier, director of the Division of Nurse Education, is particularly eager to hear from applicants who have had two years of collegiate preparation and are ready to begin their professional education.

"The young women we wish to interest in this program," Miss Authier said, "must be in high academic standing. In addition, they must be physically fit, dependable, accepting applications for its next class, which will get under way December 27.

Approximately 2,000 Negro student nurses have joined the U. S. Cadet Nurse Corps since its creation in 1943, when Congress unanimously passed the Bolton Act, at the urgent request of leaders in the nursing and hospital fields. At the end of the first year of the corps' existence 33 schools of nursing out of a possible 55 that accept Negro students have qualified under this program administered by the U. S. Public Health Service.

According to directors of schools of nursing accepting Negro students, the corps is performing a two-fold service for the race—it enables young women who are high school graduates to enter a professional field and it enables schools of nursing to set higher scholastic standards, thereby attracting young women with more than the basic academic requirements of high school graduation to the nursing profession.
