The Frost Rye.
The frosty rye is about 12 to 14 inches high. It is a very hardy plant and will stand a severe frost. It is a very good feed for stock and will also make a good hay crop.

3 degrees below zero, the minimum 72 degrees below, and the maximum 52 degrees above zero. But we built ourselves a house and had an ample stock of provisions. We also discovered, only six miles distant, a mine, 9 ft. of which could be knocked a ton of coal with a single blow of the pick, so that by loading the coal upon our sledges and hauling it over the ice to camp, we were enabled to do so in keeping warm. About 100 miles northward to Fort Cooper I saw an open river flowing out of Lake Hazen. The ice of the river was open for a distance of about three miles, although for three consecutive months of degrees below zero was the mean temperature. The river was open in April, with indications that it had been so all through the winter.

"I suppose you suffered much from cold and discomfort on the expedition?"
"Very true. I can tell you of many instances when with the thermometer 40 degrees below zero I was obliged to wear two pairs of shoes upon my feet. It is necessary when venturing to camp in such a freezing weather for a man immediately to take off his shoes and put them into his breast towards the middle of a dry pole. We used a dried meat, called pemmican, a pound of which would furnish a man with fuel for a day. Hard work and severe ice wind accompaniments. Every sledge had to carry a pick and shovel, a hatchet or an ax, a sleep bag, and an alcohol lamp, which was used in melting the ice to obtain water, etc. The average weight of the sledge and its contents sometimes ran 300 pounds, which the explorer is compelled to drive over the ice, and in the case of the sledge, often laboring severely, and advancing but a few miles in a day, when the elements conspire against him. The darkness, the sense of isolation and the wide waste of snow and ice are but too well calculated to make a man lonely and dejected."

Postoffice Remances.
On one occasion a gentlemanly looking person called and expressed a fear that he had folded two letters in wrong envelopes, and that all his prospects in life depended on his recovering his letters. Back and forward the messages passed, until finally the gentlemanly person was admitted to a private room in the house. The gentlemanly person, whose interests seemed to be of a serious nature, entered the room, and a single glance of his eyes told me that he was a man of some consequence. He was a man of some consequence, and he was a man of some consequence.

A Sign that Means Business.
"We're going to move again," said the boy to the grocer on the corner.
"No, you're not. When I called with the 10 year letter and he was going to stay all winter."
"Well, we ain't. We're throwing the ash sand sweeping down cellar and that means business every time."

A Robber's Career.
The other day, in one of the jails of New Zealand, there died a man, who for many years had been an object of interest to the colonists. The early years of Henry Garrett were shrouded in a veil of mystery, but in 1842 he received a sentence in England of 14 years penal servitude. At that time penal servitude meant transportation. Garrett was removed to a colony of Norfolk Island, in that Pacific archipelago, disposed himself of his full term, for it is not until 1857 that he again appeared. In that year, having reached Australia, he concluded to try his luck in the gold fields, and he finally carried out a most daring bank robbery, which drew attention to his name, and he was arrested and sentenced to penal servitude for life.
