PRACTICAL EDUCATION.

Boastful supposed wisdom usually is far more prominently displayed by the illiterate than by the most learned, and the baneful results of ignorance are more dangerous to society than any plague that can be thrust upon a community. Bigotry and prejudice are, and always have been, costly luxuries to a nation, while education and liberal thought have been the corner stone of every mighty empire. The clouds of ignorance may hover over a people for ages. But light is sure to flash through them, even though it takes a revolution to accomplish it. At the close of the middle ages in Europe was a free thought crushed, individual liberty stifled, and superstition supreme, learning and the higher arts of civilization hooted at, and the more vicious accomplishments of war and brute force fostered, papal authority law, and free religious belief punished, until, through revolution, mental light finally dawned and education of the mind instead of development of the body became popular, and all the states of Europe awoke to the necessities of enlightenment. But it was not till together the education which is obtained from colleges and high schools—the delving for a knowledge of the classics and higher branches of science—that brought the people out of this darkness; it was the practical education of every-day life that wrought the change—not what is learned from books alone, but the experience of life taken together with cultivated minds.

Numerous cases might be cited where wealth and illiteracy have been crushed by educated poverty. Illiterate France twice felt the superior force of education when competing on the battle field with more enlightened nations; and the same is the case in social and business life, ignorance and wealth can never successfully compete with intelligence and cultivation.

Probably never before was there such a combination of circumstances demanding practical education as is presented in the Northwest at present. Social and political problems of the gravest character are presenting themselves. The general spirit of destruction as shown by the encouragement given nihilism and communism in the East and is to-day being instilled into the minds of the people of the West, the wonderful growth of corporations and their too frequent abuse of powers intrusted to them, the shameful spread of intemperance, the useless extravagance in which every class live, the growing disposition to put law at defiance and consult self-interest first, are rising evils which demand the production of minds of clear and liberal views which education alone can give. How and where to produce such minds is a question that took ages to determine. The oldest nations of the earth long discussed this problem. The collegiate course was tried and found wanting, for few of the general populace were in a condition to spend the necessary time or expense of obtaining that class of education. The free schools were found to be the only medium by which the people at large could obtain the education required, and those nations which first adopted free schools and compulsory education are to-day the most prosperous and most enlightened. Compare the relative positions of Germany and Russia, the one with her free schools and compulsory education, has an enlightened, happy and progressive people, the other with out a free system of education, is over run with an ignorant peasantry and blood-thirsty nihilists.

And we may well bring the situation home to ourselves. Compare the youth of Prineville, with no educational advantages, with the youth of our neighboring towns where free schools have always existed. Does the comparison suit you? Are you contented to go on living as you have, surrounded by a class of children who have all the natural qualifications of mind and principles to make them the leading lights of the nation, but through your inactivity are destined to be the hood-carriers for their inferiors in everything excepting education? Parents, would you rather see your children fitted for servants than for statesmen? Would you prefer that they grow up educated farmers and ranchmen, capable to transact their own business, or ignorant nonentities, who are compelled to employ some one else to do their thinking and transact their business? Why are you striving to lay up wealth for your offspring which they may at give them wealth of mind, a thing no man can steal? Do you desire that your children remember you with gratitude when you have passed from this world to the next? Do you wish to do your duty by those whose fate God has placed in your keeping? If so, wake up from your lethargic musings and put forth an effort to build a school house and maintain a free school in Prineville. Give your children advantages that will place them on equal footing with the people of the rest of the world. Give them a common school education, at least, and then you have taken one step toward doing your grandest duty to your children, to your God and to your nation.

The Mexican authorities at El Paso have arrested an editor by the name of Cutting and are hurrying troops to the scene of action. This shows that the Mexicans are level-headed. When one gets to monkeying with an editor he should be within easy reach of the troops, or close to a large hole to crawl into, a kind of reversible hole that they could pull in after them. We suggest that Uncle Sam keep his hands off and let the editors this side of the line settle the business, and we nominate "Col." Lang as leader of the expedition. The "Col." is a fighter, wild and woolly, and a bad man from "Thunder" creek. Just think of the hard "cases" from the editorial reserves, led by "Old Silo Tom," bearing down on the poor defenceless Mexicans, shouting "El Paso, won't go home till morning," there would be Cutting and slashing for tall timber.

American sympathizers with Parnell have sent him much more than a hundred thousand dollars in contributions to his election funds. This shows the interest felt this side of the Atlantic in the result of the home-rule contest. The latest indications are that the parties will stand very nearly the same as in the last parliament, which, of course, means a defeat of the measure, more discussion, agitation and political trouble.

A republican contemporary sneers at the idea that the people are with the president. Very well. If the republicans don't think so let them trot out Mr. Blaine in 1888 and see us repeat the dose.—S. F. Examiner.
