descriptive of Ann Arbor and the University of Michigan (U. of M.) Hoping that a description of this beautiful little city and of the university known and renowned throughout the civilized world, and which is destined to eclipse either Harvard or Yale, will be of interest to the numerous readers of the REVIEW, is the only excuse offered for tas prolitition.

Ann Arbor, situated in the south eastern part of Micaigan, is the county sea and chiefcity of Washtenaw county. It is built on gently rising hills overlooking Huron river at the junction of the Michigan Central, Toledo, Ann Aroor and Northern Michigan railroads, lo ien. cated 37 miles distant from Detroit, 248 miles from Chicago, and 46 from Toledo Onio, and is within a few minuets ride from Lake Huron The present population is upward of 13,000, and the city is still enjoying a healthy, constant growth. Founded in 1824, its progress has peen identical with that of the university, which has been and is still the life and support of the little city.

A tradition relating to the origin of its name is told with pride by the early settlers. The story is, that in times long past, two families located on the east and west side of what is now the city of Ann Upon this are buildings, fourteen
