

OCHOCO REVIEW.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1899.

HOW IT WORKS.

The Times-Montaineer seeks to score a point for protection by commenting on what was said in these columns some time since regarding the failure of Crook county to raise its own breadstuff and the sending of $100,000 out of the county each year for that article by making the assertion that "protection says, keep money at home and be patriotic." Well, in a measure that is correct; it keeps money at home, but generally in the hands of those who are engaged in pursuits directly effected by protection, but not in the hands of those who are forced to consume protected articles and pay an advance of one-third their actual value for such articles. If protection will make Crook county produce its own breadstuff, as the Times-Montaineer seems to think; will cause the rains to descend from heaven and produce reasonable years during which wheat can be raised, then we are in favor of protection, tooth and toe-nail; but this is too absurd. Let's see how it would affect Crook county, provided we were differently situated and could not get our breadstuff from localities within the borders of the United States.

Let us suppose that the boundary line between Crook and Wasco counties was the dividing line between the United States and British America, and that there was a tariff of forty per cent on wheat, flour, etc. It is a dry season and we are unable to raise enough wheat to supply the home demand and are compelled to import it across the line. Under present circumstances it costs us $100,000 a year, but with our forty per cent protection it would cost us $60,000 more for the blessed privilege of protecting one or two farmers who might be fortunate enough to raise a few bushels of wheat. This comparison may be far-fetched, but it is a true picture of what protection is doing for the American people to day. England, Australia and other countries produce things the American people must have, and which twenty-five years of exorbitant protection have failed to cause us to produce, and to protect the few who are engaged in producing such articles, and making immense fortunes, thereby the masses are forced to pay on an average of forty per cent more than its actual value for what they consume. This state of affairs may be patriotic, but it is an expensive mode of creating patriotism among the people who have to support it. It creates that kind of patriotism exhibited by the oppressed workmen who go on strikes and become nihilists.

SIMPLY WAITING.

There is no use to conceal the fact that the business men and capitalist of this place are only waiting the advent of the O. P. railroad when they will lose no time in going to it. Where the road crosses the great Deschutes river will spring up a town in as many weeks as it has taken years to make Prineville what it is today. There is no secret about this, as our merchants all say they are ready to pull up at a days notice. And why shouldn't they? The Deschutes river is the only stream of any importance between the Cascades and Snake river on the eastern boundary of the state. And when it is known that the Deschutes is the grandest water power in the Northwest, we might say, it seems natural to indulge in unlimited expectations concerning it. Already there is a rush for land in that vicinity, our local capitalists are investing there, and already have manufacturing industries planning, and under way. The simple fact that an effort might be made to embarrass any business scheme of this kind will amount to nothing in the end. We all wait for the completion of the railroad to the summit, and into this country. God speed the day! While we have one of the prettiest little villages in the world, we are conscious of our painful isolation, and are happy to know that it will soon end.

Congress has wisely set down upon the effort of the members who lost by Silcott's defalcation to reimburse themselves out of the public treasury. Oregon's representative was one of the losers, and of course he voted for the bill.

THE RACE PROBLEM.

What disposition to make of the negro, is a question that has worried the minds of the American people—both North and South—ever since their bonds were broken by the overthrow of the Southern Confederacy. It was at first thought to make them citizens and give them the right of suffrage, placing them on an equality with the whites would elevate them to a higher degree of moral and intellectual standing; but after a quarter of a century of experiment in this direction, it is found as a class, the negroes are inferior and there is no hope of elevating them to an equality with the whites. Some to be sure have more than ordinary ability and are climbing to prominence, but generally speaking the negroes of to-day are little superior to what they were twenty-five years ago when they emerged from a state of servitude, and the hope that they will some day reach a higher state is not flattering.

That there is a prejudice against the colored people in the South there is no denying, and the whites are not to be severely blamed for it, for what white man of the North or West, no matter what his sympathies for the colored man, would be willing to accept him as his equal? That the negro does not form a desirable character in society and that he is not a law-abiding citizen, generally speaking, is shown by the reports of the outrageous crimes, and the court records of the South.

But how to rid the country of this undesirable element is a long-discussed question, and one that is not readily settled. Senator Butler has undertaken to solve the problem by introducing a bill to provide for the free transportation of negroes who desire to emigrate to Africa which he believes would relieve the South of a large number of the colored people who now constitute such a disturbing element. He believes that many of the negroes would accept the government's assistance to get out of the country, and their places would be taken by intelligent whites. Senator Butler's proposition is certainly worthy the attention of congress, and if it becomes a law will have a tendency to settle the race question in the South.

W. Lair Hill will very likely codify the laws of Washington, as the house of the legislative body has passed the bill granting him such authority.

A bill has passed the senate granting the state of Oregon townships 27 and 31 of land in which is situated Crater lake, for a public park. Crater lake is surrounded by the most magnificent scenery, and will make one of the most beautiful parks in the world.

It now appears that the senate is taking a sensible view of the Montana muddle and will take no hand in attempting to straighten out affairs in that state, but will refuse all favor of the "senators' seats. It is certainly a local affair which should be settled in the state legislature, and if not there, in the states courts.

Walker Blaine, examiner of claims in the state department and eldest son of James G. Blaine, died in Washington on the 15th, of acute pneumonia, superinduced by an attack of La Grippe. Walker Blaine was 36 years of age and was a lawyer by profession. He was a great favorite with his father, and for a number of years had been his chief adviser.

The experience of the two Dakotas and Montana ought to be a warning to Wyoming and Idaho to not be in a hurry to den the habiliments of statehood. The Dakotas are in a dreadful financial strait, while Montana has a contested election which she cannot settle. If Wyoming and Idaho can do no better they had as well remain territories.

So much is now seen in the papers about La Grippe, the world-wide epidemic, that readers no doubt think it is something dreadful, if not necessarily fatal. Doctors say that not two in a thousand die of it alone, but when it is carelessly treated, it may, in connection with other ailments, especially those of the lungs and respiratory organs, result fatally. There is not much danger of any dying of La Grippe in this climate.

"CHINOOK" AGAIN.

A correspondent of the Oregonian of last Saturday forever sets at rest all doubt about "Chinook." He goes back eighty years, and says the real chinook wind is a cool north-west summer-wind, or was so called at that time. He says: "But there is no more harm in calling the warm south winds that sweep the snow from the fields of Eastern Oregon by this name than there is in calling white black—nor is there any more sense in one than the other; but it sounds very absurd to one familiar with its true meaning."

A general use of the word as applied to the warm winds throughout the entire north-west makes this meaning the correct one for the present time, no matter what it may have meant eighty years ago. So-called "ejars" have discussed the causes and effects of these winds under the name of Chinook winds. All people throughout the entire territory where these winds are prevalent know them by that name. The correspondent referred to, will find by research that eighty years ago the word was spelled Chin-hook, and he is perfectly welcome to the original orthography, but must take the original orthography with it. Besides, so long as there is probably only one person in the great north-west familiar with its true meaning, the present application of the word does not sound very absurd to the rest of the people. And while on this subject we may as well remark that a genuine Chinook wind is what this section of the state needs just now.

Washington has the longest winded legislature on record.

The bill for the admission of Wyoming has been favorably reported by the committee to which it was referred.

When Washington got up its constitution the people called it the constitution and laws of Washington. But it is nothing to the sitting of the legislature for length.

Three magazines containing ten tons of nitro-glycerine exploded recently near North Clarendon, Pa., setting fire to 25,000 barrels of oil destroying much property. No cause assigned. Loss $370,000.

California sportsmen are now having shipped from the East a large number of bob white quail and catfish, which they propose to stock their hills and streams. The game will be protected by state laws.

The Walla Walla Board of Trade has memorialized congress to appropriate $10,000 to beautify and improve the military reservation at that place. The movement is heartily approved by the people there.

Secretary Windom has prepared his bill for issuing treasury notes or deposit of silver bullion. The bill is in accordance with the recommendations in his report to congress, published in these columns some time since.
