A NOVEL IDEA.

Ex-Senator Henderson, of Missouri, who has made finance a study, has arrived at the conclusion that coined or authorized paper money is not necessary as a medium of exchange for conducting the business of the country.

There is no error of more common prevalence than an abundance of money issues naturally adds to the commercial or business energy of the people. Of course, a certain amount of money tokens are absolutely essential with which to effect smaller exchanges of commerce. These money tokens don't create exchanges, but exchanges create the necessity for tokens.

While such a system as Mr. Henderson advocates will likely not meet with general approval, it has some commendable features. By it the contention between the holders and producers of gold and silver, and the clamor for government favoritism in the course of these metals would be averted.

The Oregonian will have to either bridge its Washington correspondent or go back on some of its recent statements concerning the cause of present financial depression. All along it has laid the present troubles to two causes—the incoming of the present administration, which threatened a reduction of the tariff, and the operation of the Sherman silver law, which it has asserted was purely a democratic measure.

There is vastly more money in Oregon now than ever before. There is too much of it here. What the country needs is for the money to be given a chance—Salem Statesman.

The "value money" law passed by the last legislature, was evidently intended to benefit the insured who is honest and insures for protection and not for speculation, but has had the opposite effect. It puts an extra expense of ten percent on them, while it offers the unscrupulous an opportunity to counter with agents, insure their property for more than it is worth, and force insurance companies to pay policies in full.

do not always do this, and the insured who pays the premium on a greater amount than his property is worth usually does so for fraudulent purposes, and is not deserving of the protection this law was intended to give.

The Oregonian has at last observed its mission. It is to divide the state. It wants to make a new state of Eastern Oregon. The Herald makes a long, windy argument in favor of division, which it considers convincing reasons for establishing a new state, but it is not likely that the people will be convinced of the necessity for creating a new state government. True the interests of Eastern and Western Oregon are not identical, neither are the interests of the states east and west of the Rocky mountains.

In view of the present scarcity of money and the bad condition of some of our roads, there should be no long delay in expending the money received from the state for improving highways. Five thousand dollars put in circulation among laborers just now would relieve matters wonderfully, and if judiciously expended would put most of the roads in the county in good repair.

A mind reader is to be buried in Chicago six feet beneath the surface. A crop of barley will be sown on his grave, sprout, ripen and be harvested, and then the gentleman expects to step forth from the grave, shake the soil off his person and be as good as new. He is to have neither food nor drink, nor is there to be any means of communicating air into his coils.

Col. John Lane, recently appointed inspector of Indian agencies, is an enthusiast on the subject of educating and civilizing the Indians. The other day a Salem republican remarked to him that the Indians graduating from school frequently returned in reservations, and resorted to the old blanket style of living. The Col. returned: "Well, yes, some well raised boys have become drunkards and outlaws; some have gone to the penitentiary or joined the republican party; so long as this is the case there is hope for the Indian."

A Nevada miner with no faith in banks carried $2000 in his pocket. At last evening he had his pocket left, but the money had changed ownership. There is no record of his having changed articles of faith.

It is reported that work of extending the Oregon Pacific into Eastern Oregon will be commenced today. It is only a rumor, still we hope it is true.
