Anniversary of Lakeview's Fire.

One year ago last evening at 8:45 o'clock Lakeview was visited by a catastrophe that will never be forgotten by those who were residents of or visitors to the town at that time. It was a conflagration in which nearly three hundred thousand dollars worth of property was destroyed in the space of two hours and thirty minutes, and a time that tried mens hearts and nerve. In all the loss of money and property, thank God, there was not the loss of a single human being. On the morning of May 23d, following, the entire business portion of the town was a smoldering mass of ruin.

Today on the anniversary of the big fire, New Lakeview, with her business columns of brick to replace the frame buildings destroyed, stands as a monument to the enterprise of her citizens, and is early the most substantial built and wealthiest town in southeastern Oregon.

The great conflagration in which sixty-four buildings were destroyed came at a time when nearly all the townspeople were huddled together in the big opera house where a republican speaking was in progress. There were incidents that night to make the stoutest hearts quail and try the nerves of strong men. The air current was favorable to the fire god, and the latter fanned by the strong breeze from the mountain canyons, seemed to laugh at the puny efforts of man in the unequal contest for supremacy.

A wonderful transformation has taken place in the short space of one year, and the citizens of Lakeview are proud of their town, and it is admired by all visitors. The town that takes pride in its buildings, widening its boundry lines, swelling its volume of business and making itself felt as a factor in developing the country deserves and wins the approbation of the busy world about it. Lakeview has no "boom," but a substantial, steady growth, a reviving spirit of enterprise, an increase in commerce and a display of native wealth.

And the building up of Lakeview with substantial brick structures continues. Numerous new buildings are in contemplation for this year and a year hence.

On this, the anniversary of Lakeview's big conflagration, The Examiner congratulates the business men of Lakeview on their pluck and energy.—Examiner.

Price of Wool.

E. Y. Judd, of a large Hartford, Conn. wool house, has arrived in Pendleton direct from the east, to remain for the season. In an interview with the East Oregonian on the wool situation, Mr. Judd said:

"Experience of wool buyers during the past season has been such as to make them extremely conservative this year. Immense losses have been sustained, many houses suffering from the boom in prices preceding and during the buying season of a year ago; values dropping after season's purchases had been made and having on hand a large quantity of wool that cost considerable more than the price for which woolen goods manufacturers would take it.

"Wool growers and others will remember the boom of last year. Representatives of many houses rushed to the west early in the spring before the wool had been removed from the sheep's back and attempted to contract at high figures. Over in Wallowa county, the growers sold at high figures. The same was true in other sections. Here few contracted and many held. "I estimate that there is now on hand in Oregon about nine million pounds held from former years. This, with the crop now being sheared, makes a large amount to come to market. Probably Oregon will have 25 to 30 million pounds to sell this year.

"Early last year growers were importuned to sell at a 13-cent basis, whereas the same good grade of wool would not now bring 10 cents a pound. This represents the difference between 1900 and 1901, in so far as concerns value. This reduces the valuation three cents from what some growers refused last year. The reduction is called for by the condition of the wool market, and for the manufactured woolen goods, which is very unsatisfactory, indeed.

"The present season will probably see many consignments, with selling by the consignee later on. There may be, and indeed, I rather look for improvements later in the season. Many things point toward this, and engender a hope that prices may stiffen in response to a stronger demand by the manufacturers of woolen goods."

A Rain Maker.

Here is a good joke on Dr. V. C. Cook, who lives across the river from The Dalles. On Tuesday of last week he was lamenting to an old Indian medicine man that no rain had fallen to make crops grow and that there would be no grain raised this summer, whereupon the Indian asked how much the doctor would give for a good rain. "One hundred dollars," said the doctor. "Very well," responded the Indian, "I'll go make it rain, you give me hundred dollar." The doctor assented, and the Indian repaired to his wigwam, smoked himself and offered up prayers to the god of rain. Rain began falling Wednesday night and by Thursday was pouring down in torrents. The next day Mr. Indian appeared at the doctor's house and demanded his pay, declaring that he had brought the rain. The doctor is somewhat sceptical about the Indian having produced the rain, but doesn't know how to get out of his bargain.—Times-Mountaineer.

The Astoria Budget says: Master Fish Warden Van Dusen returned home last evening after having made a trip to the Deschutes river in search of a suitable site for a salmon hatchery. This river was formerly a favorite breeding ground for salmon but now few if any enter the stream. Mr. Van Dusen finds that it is naturally adapted in every way for the purpose and feels assured that a suitable location can be secured but will not definitely decide upon building a hatchery there until he can learn why the salmon have stopped entering it.
