Lava Lore.

From our regular correspondent.

The exploring party that went through the cave last Sunday did not know anything of the storm above ground.

Mrs. Moffit and daughter May, are here on a pleasure trip.

Messers Malone and McGreer came down from their sheep camp last Saturday and report quite a bear experience. While Joe Kelsey was out with his sheep one day last week, all alone amid nature's wilds, sweetly thinking of the girl he had left behind him; he was forcibly recalled to earthly things by seeing a large bear only a few feet from him. What should he do, was his first thought. He had no time to stand and think for the bear was coming for him as fast as he could and it was necessary to widen the breach as much as possible. Seizing a pine he ran up it as nimbly as a squirrel. Mr. bear realizing his defeat perched upon his haunches and coolly sat looking at his comrade in the tree. We can imagine Joe thinking of some messages to send to absent ones, but his "time" had not come for the bear sauntered away in search of easier game and Mr. K. came down and went to camp. The next day the boys persuaded him to teach them the art of climbing, but when they reached the tree he could not climb it. He now says he never could climb those old pines and does not know how he did it when the bear was after him. He considers it one of the wonders of the new century.

BUSCH GREAS.

Warm Spring Warblings.

From our regular correspondent.

The Indians are very busy now harvesting their crops, which will be up to the average and the surplus will be hauled to Tygh and Prineville.

It is something terrible for a young man to have an opportunity to climb Mount Hood with young ladies to get a shock of modesty to prevent such a pleasure.

I learn that there was only one bidder for the supplies to be furnished the Indian department, which shows a prosperous country that doesn't need government contracts.

Rev. Gordon has arrived and taken charge of the mission and his predecessor, Rev. Speer, has gone to Shedd's, in Linn county.

Rev. Morrow's successor has arrived to take charge of the Simnasho mission and Mr. Morrow will soon leave for Vale where he intends entering the ranks of the farmer.

Pleased to see the boost given Hon. J. N. Williamson by the Pendleton Tribune, but that paper's management is of whole cloth and a yard wide; especially when it comes to the interest of eastern Oregon and her worthy men.

When the mind is free from care and enjoying the beauties of Oregon scenery, ideas, new and novel, come to us. Even the adept in his or her line, may think of something strikingly original. This is well illustrated by recent events at Cascadia. A large number of young ladies from Linn county and elsewhere in Oregon, were out on a stroll one morning. Several had cameras, and one was not an amateur at the picture business. They were shot in all kinds of positions and poses and finally all laid down behind a log, leaving just their faces in view. This proved so satisfactory and as all were preparing to wade one of the beautiful little creeks close at hand, they placed their bare little feet just where their heads had been and the kodak finished the job. This is surely a feat of photography not reached before. —Albany Herald
