

Tongue At Charleston.

From the editorial column of the News and Courier, Tuesday Morning, April 29, 1902.

In his eloquent speech at the Exposition on Saturday Congressman Tongue, of Oregon, paid a fine tribute to the spirit of the pioneers who conquered the great Commonwealth from the wilderness and made it one of the richest and most progressive in the Union. Incidentally, and without any intention of exposing one of the cherished weaknesses of his Charleston audience, he said some things which they cannot hear too often for their own good, as follows:

"It is not the man who is satisfied with his lot and his surroundings that goes to the front. Contentment is the enemy of achievement. Contentment never suffers, never sacrifices. * * * Contentment betters no condition, rights no wrongs. * * * A contented man would build no factory, construct no steamboat, engage in no railroad enterprise. The men who have the money to engage in great undertakings would have enough to supply all the necessities of life and many of its luxuries, could pass their days in ease and leisure, pursuing only their own pleasures, free from toil and sweat, if they were only contented. Contentment may bring happiness, it may be desirable for the individual, but it makes no progress and is not in the interests of humanity at large."

The men who opened the West to settlement and civilization were men with some higher notion of the reason for existence than the application of ancient formulas to modern needs and conditions. The spirit which controlled them and made them successful is the spirit which would make Charleston once more a great commercial city. "It is not the man who is satisfied with his lot and surroundings that goes to the front." Don't forget that! What is needed in Charleston is something of the spirit of the pioneers who built up Oregon.

Shudders At His Past.

"I recall now with horror," says Mad Carrier Burnett Mann, of Levanna, O. "My three years of suffering from Kidney trouble. I was hardly ever free from dull aches or acute pains in my back. To stoop or lift mill sacks made me groan. I felt tired, worn out, about ready to give up, when I began to use Electric Bitters, but six bottles completely cured me and made me feel like a new man.
