 JAMES E. KIRK, Supt.

While the JOURNAL reporter was at the fair Thursday he caught a few remarks from different parties, whose names he did not know, but as they are only expressions of the way people were enjoying themselves on that day the names will not make this article sound any heavier.

As we were taking a rubber at the fruit and vegetable exhibit, we caught a few remarks like the following. "Why, this is equal to the State Fair, didn't think Crook county could raise such fruit as this. My! just look at those potatoes, 'aint they whoppers, and those apples, I would like to eat one of 'em; they are as good as any I ever saw. Are those apples there Hood River apples? why, Crook county apples look better than they do, just look at these. In fact the Crook county apples did show up better than the samples Judd Palmer brought from Hood River, and we got so 'apple hungry looking at them that we had to leave.

The next thing we run against, was the horse races. The first one was between the Biggs, Pollard and Joslin horses. The Pollard horse was the favorite in the betting. When they at last got started, Pollard's horse and Joslin's broke even, with Biggs's horse fifty feet in the rear. Then one could hear the following expressions as the horses changed positions. See that black horse run, he will win sure, but look at Biggs horse gain, just look at him, he is going to win, $5 on Biggs horse, here they come, Pollard's horse wins by a length, better luck next time old man.

The next race was the relay between the Yancey string of three horses and the Cram string. The talent was sure they had a sure thing and were offering odds that the Yancey string would win. They overlooked the riders. The horses got off together the first time and kept well together all the way round, the Cram horse coming in first, but in the change of horses the Cram horse got off first, while the other rider, well, he got lost in the change, and when he did get started, the other horse was three hundred yards ahead. This made the Cram men feel good and they were encouraging him to bury up. By the time the last round was made the Cram horse was a quarter of a mile in the lead, and the talent were broke. We had just time to give the rest of the fair a passing glance. One could hear expressions of surprise and wonder that Crook county had so many resources. It is an eye opener to be sure and it will be of great benefit to the county to have a meeting like this ever fall.

While the pools were being sold on the race Friday a young sport made a bid on the first horse and got it. When bids were called for the others he bought them also. After the race we asked him if he won and he said: "You bet I did." This sounds as if this might be one of the sports from Mitchell.
