"I dreaded the change of life which was fast approaching. I noticed Wine of Cardui, and decided to try a bottle. I experienced some relief the first month, so I kept on taking it for three months and now I menstruate with no pain and I shall take it off and on now until I have passed the climax."

last June, publishes the fact that 388,329 acres in Oregon have been reclaimed by irrigation. Some of this has been done by co-operative work of farmer neighbors, and some by incorporated capital. Mr. Herbert Wilson, of the Hydrographic Bureau, says the irrigated farms of Oregon average 56 acres each in size; that the first cost of water in preparing the land for cultivation has averaged $17.23 per acre; that the estimated cost by the irrigators has been $13.48, while the average value of land irrigated has been $57 an acre, and the annual average value of farm products has been $13.90 per acre.
I now revert to the original statement with which I opened this letter, to this effect, namely, that the "people of this region are opposed to irrigation." The writer, in making that statement, knew just what Williamson chose to let him know, and came in contact with just those people whom it suited Williamson to let him meet. There were two purposes to accomplish; one was to impress on the writer the notion I have quoted from his letter, and the other to secure the election of Williamson for the purpose of preventing the irrigation of the lands of Crook county, for the purpose of a wholesale devotion of all the National domain to the stockraisers.
The statement that the people of Crook county are opposed to irrigation is not true. It is the unblushing lie of men who are seeking the powerful influence of the Oregonian to prevent that settlement of the public lands which will curtail the sphere of their robberies and force them to pay the state and Nation a fair price for their cattle feed. So far is it from the truth, a residence of four months at work in the valley of the Deschutes has shown me with tremendous force that every farmer settled in the region is clamorous for the construction of works.
Am I unjust to this man? Observe all his public acts, notably just now, his bleeding the state treasury in the interest of the sheepraising business by the coyote scalp tax. The men who claim this aim from the state are among the wealthiest and most prosperous citizens, and should be forced to protect their stock by the employment of proper assistance in its care. Let them pay for coyote scalps. They are the only interested parties in the job. Has any citizen knowledge that these fellows have demanded less money from the citizens of Oregon for their mutton and wool by reason of the coyote bounty tax he has been forced to pay for their profit? Let the sheepmen take care of their sheep. The town merchant must himself pay for the protection of a special police officer. Why should the state pay an insurance premium for the protection of this man's property? The truth is, they are professional grafters, and the habit of grafting has so grown on them that no demand on the public treasury has reckoned by them too impudent for assertion. When, several months ago, I became familiar in Crook county with the predatory use of the public pastures of the Nation I addressed a comprehensive letter to an influential friend in Washington, begging that the attention of the Interior Department be called to the practices of these pirates. I have reason to believe that their case will be taken in hand in due time, as I understand, by letters received, that an agent of the Interior Department is now engaged in making an investigation of the crime.
Bulletin No. 196 of the last census, referred to above, places the "average" cost of irrigating the lands of Crook county at $7.98 an acre, and in Kalamath (the site of the O. D. Co.'s work) $9.42. Now, the State Land Board, in contracting with the two companies, has allowed one of them $10 an acre and the other $9.75 for building these works. This leaves a small margin for interest and profit on the investment. Let it be distinctly understood that, while this amount is a lien on the land for the security of its payment, like any mechanic's lien, it is work done under contract for the state, which becomes the owner of the land while the corporation does not thereby become the owner of a single acre. I repeat this, that it may not be lost from view as the most important fact in this discussion.
Let the state irrigate and own the 1,000,000 offered it by the National government, and let the National government spend its $1,000,000 where it can best be used on the remaining 2,000,000 acres of arid land. It can irrigate not more than 100,000 acres at the most with $1,000,000. But it will be just so much ahead. Let us get all the good that is offered our beautiful state, although it may drive some cattle and sheep, with HOGS into other fields a little farther from home.
Respectfully,
ALFRED F. SEARS, C. E.

Balliet Has Lost.

DES MOINES, Nov. 7.—Judge Munger, of the United States court, today refused to grant Leston Balliet, known as the "Mining King," a new trial and sentenced him to pay a fine of $1000 and to serve one year in the county jail.
Balliet was convicted last spring of using the United States mail for fraudulent purposes. In 1900 he purchased what was known as the "White Swan" mine in Baker City, Oregon, which had been deserted by the original owners, and immediately began to exploit the same through newspaper advertisements and sold stock on the monthly payment plan. It was shown upon the witness stand at the time of the trial that over $180,000 was received by Balliet from small investors from all over the United States. It was also shown that not a dollar was expended upon the mine, although representations were made to the contrary in his advertising matter.
Balliet gave notice of an appeal. The case has been tried twice and has cost the government fully $50,000.

All For $3000.
