JAMES E. KIRK, Supt.

The law is lame—absurdly lame—when it does not provide suitable and ready punishment for the cowards and brutes who abandon the women they have promised to love and cherish; the scoundrels who run away from their own little children, leaving them to starve or survive as may happen; or the human animals whose stay at home but aggravates their indolence, their dissipation or their cruelty in willfully failing to provide for their families. The law is lame; but the legislature meets next winter when it is hoped that that body will give the judges a chance to deal out treatment to some of these cowards.—Lantern.
