It is reported here that the Red Jacket mine near Ashwood will be re-opened some time next month, and development work on the property resumed. The Red Jacket closed down last year on account of a cave-in in the main shaft, while a drift was being run to tap the main ledge at a depth of about 3000 feet, and since that time the development of the property has been at a standstill. Considerable Antelope money has gone into the Red Jacket mine, and it will be pleasing news to the many stock-holders in this vicinity, to learn there is a prospect of renewed activity there.—Antelope Herald.
