OFFICIAL PAPER OF CROOK COUNTY.

THURSDAY, JULY 13, 1905.

The roster of the heads of the state department contains some illustrious names. Several presidents—Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, John Quincy Adams, Van Buren and Buchanan—have filled that office. Many others whose names have been conspicuously connected with the presidency—Clay, Webster, Calhoun, Everett, Marcy, Case, Seward, Blaine, Bayard and Sherman—have held the post. Other personages who played a large part in their country's politics—John Marshall, Edward Livingston, Hugh S. Legare, John M. Clayton, Jeremiah S. Black, Hamilton Fish, William E. Evans, Frederick T. Frelinghuysen and Richard Olney—have been in that office.

John Hay was eminently worthy of that association. Few men of any day have had better training for the field of diplomacy than the dead state department chief possessed. As one of Lincoln's private secretaries during the Civil War period, he necessarily came in close contact with many of the celebrities of the day in all fields of endeavor. He saw politics from the inside in a time when politics was peculiarly diversified and exciting. Afterward as a newspaper writer in high position he had an opportunity to apply the knowledge which he had gained at that best of all schools which his country furnished. Subsequently, as a member of several of the legations in Europe, and then as ambassador to England, he learned diplomacy on its technical side with a thoroughness which had never been surpassed by any American, save perhaps John Quincy Adams.

To the post of secretary of state, therefore, John Hay brought a particularly diversified and comprehensive equipment. He came to that office, too, at peculiarly critical time. The war of 1898 which had swept the last vestige of Spanish power from the American continent, which had given the United States an especially complete guardianship over the western hemisphere, and which had, at the same time, by its conquest in the Orient, made it an Asiatic power, had just been finished. The United States' political horizon had been suddenly and sweepingly broadened. Its old isolation had ended, and it had been compelled, whether it wished to or not, to take a place among the powers which give the law to the world. As America's foreign minister through this period he met the demands of a particularly delicate and exacting position to the credit of the nation and the satisfaction of his countrymen. John Hay was one of the great figures of America's new era.—Globe Democrat.

Uncle Sam has evidently made a mistake in being a friend of China. A slice of territory and a big indemnity would evidently have made them more tractable, it is evident they are inclined to impose on good will, but we think that before they persuade the people of this United States that said people wish to make their country a dumping ground for the class of people that China breeds, they will find that good will has its limits.

The base ball tournament and Fourth of July celebration held at Lakeview, Oregon, commencing July 2nd and closing July 6th was a brilliant success and one of the largest crowds in the history of Interior Oregon was present during the entire 5 days celebration. The Fourth of July exercises which were conducted by the local Fraternal Order of Eagles were a surprise to the large crowd present as they little expected to see such a creditable and elaborate program as was presented. The verdict of all those present was that it was without a doubt the best celebration ever held in Interior

Oregon. Some of the best base ball teams in Oregon and Northern California were present to compete for the big purses hung for base ball. A'turas captured first money, Silver Lake second and Lakeview third. The people of Lakeview certainly showed the visitors to their town that they knew how to do things right.

DEAL PENDING FOR OREGON KING MINE

Negotiations are pending for a transfer of the Oregon King mine of this district, which is owned by C. M. Cartwright and associates. Particulars of the deal are not made public, but residents of the camp know that exhaustive examination has been made, and it is generally believed that the Sumpter smelter interests, of which Fred D. Millor is manager, intend to take this excellent property.

The Oregon King is regarded as one of the best mines of the state, although it has not been made to produce on the scale that its showing warrants. It is opened by a shaft of 600 feet and drifts on the several 100-foot levels. A great mineral zone is defined by this work and surface explorations, which carries several veins, two or three of which have good ore.

At the time work was suspended by the former management, litigation was threatened by grub-stake interests which had been acquired by Pendleton people. Mr. Cartwright and his associates, who had but recently emerged from a prolonged contest in the federal courts, were so enraged that the property was closed, with the announcement that it would be kept so until the petty difficulties had been swept away and patent had been secured. The shaft had been sunk from the 600 level, and the drifts opened at the greatest depth were said to have a splendid body of ore in sight.

When the Oregon King is worked in systematic manner it is believed that the mine will make a steady output of 150 to 200 tons of ore daily for years from ground already explored. The fact that all deep work has found better ore than has been opened nearer the surface encourages sinking. When the property has been explored to a depth of 1,000 feet and the entire zone is thoroughly crosscut, there is no doubt in the minds of the experts who have often examined the mine that it will be the heaviest producer of gold and silver of any property yet opened in the state.

The equipment of the Oregon King is not very modern, and consists of the sinking plant. No concentrator has ever been opened on the property, but several shipments of high-grade ore have been made.—Portland Journal.

CELEBRATE THEIR GOLDEN WEDDING

Fifty years ago, on the 12th of July, at Orleans, Linn county, Oregon, Mr. David E. Templeton and Miss Lavinna Pell were married, in a company of one hundred and fifty guests.

Thursday, at their beautiful home on Crooked River, two and one half miles from Prineville, were gathered many relatives and friends to celebrate the anniversary of that happy event of fifty years ago. Surrounded by their children and grand children, and relatives who were present at their first marriage, the wedding ceremony was again performed by the Rev. J. After the ceremony all were invited to partake of an abundant banquet furnished by the guests. The bride was seated in the same chair which she occupied fifty years ago at the same table.

The bridegroom at the age of seventy-four years and the bride at the age of seventy, are still young and vigorous, due largely to the fact of their having lived the ideal out door life, and surrounded as they are, with all the comforts and pleasures of life, give promise of enjoying many more happy reunions.

Of the five children of Mr. and Mrs. Templeton all were present except Mrs. Mattie Filliber, of Portland.

Among the presents received by the happy couple were: A gold fountain pen, gold thimble, gold butter knife, spoon tray and five hundred dollars each, in twenty dollar gold coins.
