POLICY HOLDERS SHOULD HANG ON
Reports from New York say that many holders of life insurance policies are refusing to pay further premiums on them, on account of the recent revelations of crookedness in some of the companies. This is folly. By allowing their policies to lapse without making any sort of terms with the companies the holders would lose everything which they have paid in. Not only so, but they would thus increase the funds which would be at the mercy of the crooks in such companies as the crooks dominate.
There is a strong probability that most of the insurance companies are managed honestly and economically. Moreover, the big companies which are being looted by some of their officers are likely to be solvent still. It is not certain that they are solvent, for the examination of their assets by the committee has yet to take place. In the absence of a careful, impartial examination from the outside, the public will be in doubt as to those companies' exact financial status. There has been so much crookedness in the conduct of some of their leading officers that the word of those persons as to the momentary standing of their companies would carry no weight with the policy holders. The death claims can undoubtedly be paid, but the holders of the ten, fifteen and twenty years term policies will not, at those policies' maturity, get anywhere near the amount which they were led to believe they would get, although the technically guaranteed payments will probably be met.
The sensible thing for the policy holders is to hang on to their policies and make the best terms possible with the companies. When the committee of inquiry in New York finishes with the Mutual, the New York Life and the Equitable it will take up some of the other companies. It is fair to presume that the Hydes, Alexanders, McCalls and McCurdys will not be found diffused through the whole insurance fraternity, or through any large part of it. It is said the New York Life directors refuse to remove McCall, Mc. Curdy of the Mutual declares he has no intention of resigning, and says even the directors can not put him out before the expiration of his term next June. But whether solvent or not, those companies can never regain the public confidence while their present heads remain in power. Every policy holder of both companies should take pains to keep in good standing in them so as to be able hereafter to exert some influence in the management of their affairs.
