Having installed new and up-to-date machinery for the above work, I can, in most cases, save you money over sending to Portland for repairs, say nothing about time saved which is certainly quite an item. At any rate give me a trial and then you will be in a position to judge for yourself. A supply of material kept on hand at all times.

Prices took a wide range, running from 23 1/2 cents, which was paid at Shaniko for the best offerings, down to 12 cents, or possibly a cent lower, for some coarse, sandy clips. The best values were realized at the opening of the season, the last prices showing a decline of 2 cents from those first paid. This course was probably to be expected with the market held under restraint. It is also likely that had the growers contracted their wool before it was shorn they might have done better than they did with the clipped article, as the buyers that were in the field looking for contracts were then disposed to pay some premium. No great amount could have been contracted, however, with the majority of buyers holding back.

The profits that accrued to the woolgrowers, while about as large as last year, were not so extensive as in some previous years, as the cost of production has been less when wools have sold around 14 and 15 cents than now. Last winter proved an expensive one for most flockmasters and in addition the fleeces turned lighter. Owing to the long winter and the dry summer and fall the quality of the clip on the whole was somewhat inferior to that of the two previous seasons. The weight in most cases showed a decrease, the average per fleece for the state being about 7 or 8 pounds.

In 1905 practically the entire Oregon clip was contracted for, while on the sheep's backs. This year 1,000,000 pounds is a full estimate of the quantity sold in advance of shearing. In addition to the unwillingness of many of the large buyers to make contracts, the growers were also disposed to hold their wools for the public sales days, as on previous occasions they have found this the more successful way of doing business.—Oregonian.

The Breath of Life.

It's a significant fact that the strongest animal of its size, the gorilla, also has the largest lungs. Powerful lungs means powerful creatures. How to keep the breathing organs right should be man's chief study. Like thousands of others, Mrs. Ora A. Stephens, of Port Williams, O., has learned how to do this.
