THE FATAL SHOOTING

Melvin Will Have His Preliminary Hearing Tomorrow 1 o'clock.

The preliminary hearing of H. A. Melvin which was set for last Friday was postponed until tomorrow (Friday) at 1 o'clock. Certain witnesses wanted by the defense could not be found and hence the delay. There has been no new developments in the case with the exception of some facts brought to light by the correspondent of the Portland Journal. That paper contained the following dispatch regarding the shooting: The feud which terminated so fatally had existed between Melvin and Dorrance for over a year. It grew as bitter as feuds generally do before the twig snaps. A year ago, Dorrance, who owned a sawmill, bought the timber on the Melvin claim. It was purchased under contract, by virtue of which Dorrance reserved the right to use the land upon which the timber was standing for his stock. But Dorrance abused his right, it is said, and used the contract as an excuse to monopolize Melvin's fields with his cattle. This led to the first disagreement between the two. Later another dispute over water rights widened the breach already existing. Threats and counter-threats were indulged in, and a few months after the first trouble had sealed the hatred of the men toward each other, neither left his ranch without carrying a gun. In a personal encounter between the two men Dorrance pounded Melvin into insensibility. He still shows the marks and carries the bruises he received. Dorrance continued to send his cattle into Melvin's fields, and the latter one day shut up several head in his barn behind a padlocked door. Dorrance, learning of this, went to the Melvin ranch armed with a rifle and was cutting away the barn door with a hatchet when Melvin started from the house toward the intruder with a loaded rifle. James McCall, who lived with Melvin, sprang between the two and prevented what in all probability would have proved a fatal duel.

A few days later to punish McCall for his interference, Dorrance overtook him while on horseback, and at the point of a rifle barrel McCall was compelled to alight from his horse. Dorrance then marched him up the road to a place where a fence was being constructed and bade him work with diligence. Dorrance stood beside him, rifle in hand, to see that the prisoner obeyed instructions. "Work here for a couple of hours, free of charge," said Dorrance, "and learn not to interfere next time." There were other attempts without number when fatal results, arising from the strained relations between the two men, were narrowly averted, and the various troubles which had caused such bitter hatred finally were brought before the circuit court October last in the nature of a lawsuit. Judge Frazer of Portland, who was sitting on the bench in Prineville at that term, hearing of the distressing phases of the trouble between the two and the firearms they carried for protection one from the other, advised that they have their attorneys settle their differences out of court. The arrangement apparently was satisfactory and long before the fatal shots were fired, Melvin had agreed to dispose of his property holdings and move to California. The arrangement, however, had not been carried into effect when the two came face to face in the timber. As if the details of the tragedy had been prearranged, the firing began almost instantly.

Melvin is past 63 years of age and in view of the general dislike with which Dorrance was held in the community it is not believed that a jury will hold the former to a severe penalty for his act in protecting himself from a man of quarrelsome disposition. Dorrance was divorced from his wife, who resides in the east, and lived on his ranch with his 9-year-old son. He was about 42 years of age and had operated a sawmill in western Crook county for the past two years.

Frank Osborn is Commissioner.

Madras Pioneer: Frank Osborn was notified last Thursday of his appointment as a United States Commissioner to reside at Madras, to succeed Don P. Rea, whose commission expired on the 30th of November. Mr. Osborn has qualified for the office by filing his official oath in the United States District Court, of which court he is an appointee.

The new Commissioner is a life long resident of Crook county, having moved to this locality with his father in 1880, when he was less than two years old. During all of the succeeding years he has been a resident of this section of the county, residing most of the time near Culver. He enjoys a wide acquaintance throughout the section which he will serve in his official capacity, and is universally and deservedly popular among all those who know him. He is competent, industrious and attentive to his duties, and is in every way qualified to fulfill the duties of his office in a creditable and satisfactory manner. Mr. Osborn has been quite busy the past few days, taking a number of homestead proofs which were set before the Commissioner at this place. Mr. Rea has been assisting him in familiarizing himself with the work of his new office.
