

Coos Bay Point of View

The railroad contest in Oregon is one which, after all, does not disclose any discouraging features. There may be and probably is, a temporary cessation of hostilities between the Southern Pacific and the Hill interests, but there is, beyond question, a very active battle going on between the Southern Pacific and the Northwestern. The stake is central Oregon. The ultimate result is the occupation of southwestern Oregon by both roads and it may be one or two others. The road from Vale to Natron is apparently the active concern of the Southern Pacific, while the Northwestern is extending its survey westward, and seems to be making a flank movement which may disturb the Southern Pacific much more than the North Bank road ever did, for should the Northwestern penetrate to central Oregon and Lake county, and reach the coast in southwestern Oregon, she would be equidistant from San Francisco and the Puget Sound districts, and have a command of both.

But the Vale-Natron road is plainly designed to make the Drain-Coos Bay line of greater importance than was at first suspected by the people of Oregon. It is to be a transcontinental line which will enable one to take a sleeper at Coos bay and land in Denver in due time without passing through Portland, and without change. It opens up a new country and makes Coos bay a transcontinental terminal whenever the management decides its interests demand it. The Coos bay people have no special reason to worry over the Southern Pacific company. It will come to Coos Bay in good time, provided Coos Bay people insist upon it, but the way to insist upon it is to offer inducements to the Northwestern people to come.—Marshfield Times.

Fall Sheep Inspection

About September 1, according to Dr. McClure, the inspectors will commence upon a general re-inspection of the bands of the state. Should scab be found among sheep pastured upon forest reserves the owners will be required to dip twice, immediately. Should scab be found among sheep not on reserves, the fact will be reported to the state sheep inspector's office, which will handle the matter. Since the sheep were dipped in accordance with the state law the federal men have not been requiring that all sheep for shipment be dipped. Instead, the bands are merely inspected and if found to be unaffected and not recently exposed are allowed to go. This course according to Dr. McClure, will now be followed regularly, and in consequence the sheep market will benefit to that extent. Previous to the annual dipping all sheep intended for shipment outside the state had to be dipped before they could be loaded, whether actually affected with the scab or not.

That the general dipping crusade on this spring in conforming with the state law will practically rid the state of the scab is believed by Dr. McClure. In his judgment there will be but little scab left after this fall, and next spring only isolated dipping will be necessary. Under the sheep law it is possible for the sheep commission to suspend the annual dipping provision should the conditions justify.

Bring Thousands of Home-Makers

The Portland Commercial Club once circulated 327,000 leaflets in thirty days. The Club will begin next Thursday the circulation of 400,000 somewhat similar prints in twenty days. The central feature of this leaflet, a copy of which it is desired shall accompany every letter that goes out of Portland and vicinity, is the colonist rates which begin September 31st and continue until October 31st, and should by this time be familiar to our readers.

The National Irrigation Congress at Sacramento September 2-7, is attracting much attention. A rate of one fare for the round trip has been made from Portland and all points south, and a fare and a third into Portland from the east. Stop over privilege, without extra cost, will be allowed for the Oregon Irrigation meeting at Grants Pass, September 10th, 11th and 12th. Governor Chamberlain is President of the National Association, and the state will send a splendid delegation.

There is great interest throughout the entire northwest in the visit of Secretary Taft. He lands in Portland on the evening of September 5th and remains here all day the 6th. The public will be given a chance to hear him at 8 o'clock in the evening at the Armory. A rate of a fare and a third has been made from Roseburg and points north, and from Pendleton and points west. Tillamook held a most successful celebration last week. The showing of dairy products and livestock was especially attractive to the large delegation of Portland business men who made the trip in automobiles.
