Big Stock Interests

J. C. Horn, superintendent of the Prineville Land & Livestock Company's ranches at Antelope is attending the stockmen's meeting here this week.

Mr. Horn is placing an application with Forest Supervisor Ireland for a permit to graze 7700 head of sheep within the Blue Mountain Reserve the coming summer. He says the company is feeding 12,5000 stock sheep this winter, but the number will be reduced to 7700 before the summer season. The surplus will be sold as range stock and will no doubt bring a good figure thinks Mr. Horn. The stock are wintering good and there will be a surplus of hay. So far as yet there has been nothing fed but a few lambs. Mr. Horn disposed of 1100 head of rams last fall at an average of $9 per head, most of them going to an Idaho buyer.

Not the least important part of the company's business is the cattle herds. At present they have on hand 1045 head of cattle, 450 of which are being fed for the beef markets. Some 230 head were sold at Shaniko in December, bringing $3.50 for cows and $4 for steers. The remainder of the beef stock will be held until the market advances as the hay supply is good.

Money in Raising Hogs

There is money in hogs. Any farmer knows that but the amount of profit is regulated by the kinds of hogs raised and the treatment given them both in breeding and fattening.

Of the many good breeds the Poland China is perhaps unexcelled for the general farmer in this climate.

The most telling example of the hog industry in Crook county is the success of D. F. Stewart, who has produced for years the greater part of the home-cured meats that have been in the Prineville market.

Mr. Stewart raises Poland Chinas, mostly pure bred, and raises and fattens them on his ranch near town. They are fed and fattened annually from the refuse or screenings from his mills, supplemented by other mill feeds. They are given all they can eat and a little more from the time they are large enough to eat until they are ready for the scalding vat.

"Never let a pig get hungry, give him plenty of running water to drink and don't stop feeding him when he stops fattening on the outside for then he is adding at least a pound of lard each day on the inside," is the policy on Mr. Stewart's farm, and his present output show whether this policy is a success.

Of course John Breeding, who has charge of the hog department, will tell you much more that is almost as essential in the business, but the facts mentioned are the all important ones.

Some forty hogs have been butchered on the Stewart farm this season, the most of them were less than a year old. The average weights of these reached some 200 pounds dressed, and yielded an average of 30 pounds of pure lard the hog.

One porker about eighteen months old weighed 440 pounds dressed, which shows the increase in weight and comparative value if the farmer is so situated so that he can feed them more than one season before killing. Of his annual production Mr. Stewart has about twenty head yet to kill.

What is true of Mr. Stewart's farm can also be applied to almost any farm in Crook county to a greater or less degree, and when that condition arrives and Central Oregon produces its own pork and lard (and dairy products) we will see better times.

Here, too, is found the solution of the mysterious problem that confronts the farmer, namely, how can he market 1,000,000 bushels of surplus grain each year without proper transportation facilities.
We raise the feed and cannot market it and at the same time are sending thousands of dollars annually to outside markets to purchase tons of pork and lard when all conditions here are favorable to the hog industry.
Not only the surplus grains can be thus transformed into a marketable cash product but also surplus potatoes and root crops of all kinds.
Corn also is easily and successfully grown in many parts of the county as the results attained by several people last summer show.
In the case of Tillman Reuter, who lives near Madras, five distinct varieties of corn were grown all of which matured early. Everyone knows the story of corn as a pork feed.
Let every rancher raise a few hogs, at least enough to supply the local demand, and when the next periodical panic arrives Crook county will be as it usually is, well fixed and financially able to cope with the conditions.
