

Redmond News.

Redmond, July 27.

W. A. Cox has gone to his home in the western part of the state.

Messrs. Lamb and Landes made a trip to the Culver neighborhood for grain this week.

Miss Olive Smith, of Spokane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Smith of this place, is quite ill with spinal meningitis and will probably not be able to make the visit here that she was intending. Friends will anxiously await the news that she is better.

There is a new settler on the desert. Mr. and Mrs. Evison Atkinson took her in and will care for her. Weight eight pounds.

Lucile Redmond had a birthday Saturday, her ninth, and a number of her young friends enjoyed themselves with her. Colonel Belcher also had one, his 68th, but he did not know he was going to have a party, too, until they all walked in on him at his office at the townsite building. About 25 or 30 gathered and brought their eatables, including ice cream and cake of all kinds. It did not take long to fix the rooms up just as though it were the usual thing to have a party there. It did not take long, either, to stay until midnight. Everybody enjoyed himself and hopes that the Colonel will still have many as happy returns of the day.

NO TOWN KNOCKERS.

How Coryville Got Rid of a Bunch of Unprogressives.

THE YOUNG MEN ORGANIZED.

And the Croaking Critics Couldn't Stand the Ordeal of Initiation into the Mysterious Order of the G. B.'s. A Story of Masks and Spades.

There was something doing in Coryville. The G. B.'s were getting busy. Who were the G. B.'s? Oh, just follow this little story and find out!

For many years Coryville had had on hand an oversupply of citizens whose chief activity led to do with knocking the town. These fellows were but a small group, only four or five, but they did harm. Half a dozen maggot can spoil the best cheese ever made. So these town knockers, these croaking critics, were slowly undermining the good reputation of Coryville by their incessant chorus of defamation. Nothing suited them. They opposed every movement for the good of the town. They croaked and knocked and clamored and hammered whenever anybody suggested a street improvement, a new building, the organization of a business men's club or anything of the sort.

Finally the G. B.'s were organized. Of course they did not take the knockers' lunch into their confidence. There was a reason and a good one for not letting the knockers know. The G. B.'s were organized in secret. The initial meeting was held in an old abandoned schoolhouse half a mile out of town. Grips and passwords and other secret signs were adopted. Even a mystic apron was devised, but it was not to be worn where aprons usually are worn. It was to be tied around the head just below the eyes, thus serving as a mask.

The G. B.'s had been in existence only a month or so, holding their meetings every Friday night in the old schoolhouse, when one of the knockers discovered that such a society had been formed. He straightway notified his brother knockers. The group met in a grocery store.

"Seems to be something mighty mysterious about it," remarked the chief knocker.

"Yes; can't imagine what they're up to," said another. "The society seems to have thirty or forty members, and most of them are the younger element around town, young business men."

"How did you find that out?" asked knocker No. 2.

"Why, one of the members told me," replied the other.

All of which was quite true. It was true also that this member had violated the rule of the G. B.'s. He had been detailed to acquaint the knockers with these primary facts concerning the society. Immediately the knocker in chief had expressed a desire to attend a meeting. He was cordially invited along with his brother knockers.

When the five town knockers filed into the old schoolhouse at the regular Friday night meeting they found a most startling assemblage. About forty men, with long white apron-like masks concealing their faces and reaching far below their shoulders, were standing around the walls of the chamber, which contained no seats. Every fifth man carried a blazing torchlight. Many of the others carried picks, spades and shovels.

The supreme sachen of the G. B.'s advanced to the group of visitors and asked them solemnly if they desired to be initiated into the order. They replied that they did. How can a man knock unless he is on the inside? The chief knocker laughed scornfully as he assented to the initiation.

"The ordeal is severe," said the supreme sachen, "but if you survive it you are our brethren. Advance, G. B.'s!"

Fifteen of the masked figures advanced, carrying stout cords. They quickly bound the hands of the knockers behind them and tied the whole group together with a rope. Then the torch bearers came forward, the knockers were led outside, the other G. B.'s followed, and the entire party stopped on the open space back of the schoolhouse.

Without a word the men with picks began to dig, the shovellers began to shovel, while the torch bearers held their lights high above the group. After the digging was well under way the G. B.'s started up a dirgelike song in doleful voices. Altogether it was an uncanny scene.

"What-what are you fellows up to anyhow?" gasped the chief knocker.

"Gentlemen, unmask," commanded the supreme sachen. All the G. B.'s unmasked, revealing the fact that they were the leading young men of Coryville. Then the supreme sachen, who happened to own the grocery store in which the knockers chiefly knocked, addressed the candidates for initiation:

"We are the Grand Buriers. We are digging your graves. We have reached the conclusion that a few first class funerals are needed in the interest of Coryville, and we have selected you gentlemen for the honor of furnishing the raw material. For years you have knocked and blocked every movement for the good of our town, and we have decided that Coryville can get along without you. However, we are going to give you a chance. If you will promise solemnly to boost and not to knock hereafter, you may take your own time and die natural deaths. But always remember that the Grand Buriers have the tools and that we can die."

Coryville has no knockers now.
