SUCCESS IN SWINE BREEDING.

J. F. Ketler, in an article that won w the American Agriculturist, says of bog breeding and management:

As to breeds I may say all have their ears' experience in handling 100 to haracter of the progeny of pure bred erents can be foretold with a marked ree of certainty, but of crossbred nts not at all. The black breeds smally give the highest grade means with the least offal, but many of them have been bred for heavy points and consequently have lost fecundity. I who have made Prineville a dis-find relief in this line by using Chester White, Duroc-Jersey or large York. White, Duroc-Jersey or large York-shire sows, which I find profile breedrs and excellent mothers. These are bred to a thoroughbred Poland-China boar. A Potand-China boar and Berkshire sow brings a very superior feeder. In crossbreeding it is usually advisable that the sow should be of the larger breed, as this gives freedom of arturition and great suckling ability. The dam should have good length, se between upper and lower body line, fair width, strong bone, set with ight joints and not less than tweive well developed tents.

A sow to be profitable should be attle to produce two good litters amoni-ly and bring to wearing in good condi-tion an average of eight pigs to the lit-ter. Where a small herd is kept and warm quarters provided I find the early March litters the most profitable, as they are large enough to get more the litter get a good start before winseveral hundred pigs are to be handled the farrowing should be deferred till the latter part of April or first of May unless the most perfect housing and artificial warmth are provided. Even then, on account of lack of exercise for the little pigs, the fatality is consider.

BUSINESS POINTERS. can and even up the small litters with the surplus of the large ones.

The parent stock should be in fair flesh and good health at time of meting to insure strong, healthy litters. The dam should have exercise during the period of gestation—this is very important—and she should be in good tiesh at farrowing, as she will endure the drain on her system better during the suckling period and carry the litter to weaning in better shape. Her winter feed had best be of a tissue forming, laxative nature. Mill feeds, roots, field peas, soy beans, clover leaves, with an occasional dash of corn, are excellent. Bear in med that the sow must be well fed during the period of gestation to secure best results.

The sow should be placed in her farowing quarters a few days previous event, so she will become acquainted with her surroundings. She should be fed sparingly on scalded to graze cattle, horses and sheep within the DESCHUTES NATIONAL FOREST during the season of 1909, must be filed in my office at Prineville, Ore., on or before ty-four bours. Facts About Goats. Goats do not eat grass as long as there are weeds and brush.

An Angora is a prolific breeder and s productive shearer until twelve or thirteen years old.

An ordinary fence is generally effectual to confine goats. Their tendency, as a rule, is rather to go through a fence than to jump over.

Make the Cow Comfortable. Whatever adds to the comfort of the cow increases the milk yield. Discomfort decreases the yield. Strive to make the cow comfortable. Give her shade during the hottest days and the best protection you can from files.

THE JOURNAL IS 12 YEARS OLD

With last issue began Volume XIII of the Crook County Journal. And it is not a "13" which is unlucky, either, for the Journal and price in the swine contest conducted the city were never in a more prosperous condition or with brighter prospects for the future.

In the passing of the years it may be pardonable for the Journal 200 hogs annually convinces me that a to say that it has always kept pace better feeding animal is more frequently secured by crossbreeding.

This is understood to mean the proging is but a reflex of the country which it represents. For this newspaper is published in the best town of its size in central Oregoneasten Oregon, if you will-bar none. In a town made up of good citizens and alert business men > miles of adjacent territory. In the forward march of development the Journal has ever been found in the van doing all in its power to further the interests of Crook county and the city in which it is published. That these efforts have been appreciated both by the advertiser and the reader is attested by the constantly growing number of advertising columns, an increased circulation and journalistic prestige at home and abroad.

The Journal never carried more advertising, nor of a better grade, than it does at present, nor has the Journal ever had a larger or more representative subscription
