This would be inevitable for the reason that to save the dam site at that point the raliroad would have to be driven 100 feet above the river, and for a considerable part of the distance it would mean the hewing of a roadbed out of solid basaltic cliffs. This would entail an expenditure three or four times the estimated cost of $4,750,000.

But should Mr. Henny decide that the present location can be relinquished and new filings made at some point nearer the head waters of the Deschutes, it will be possible for the Harriman line into Central Oregon to be gotten under way within a comparatively short time.

It is stated that Reclamation Engineer Henny will make no recommendations as to the feasibility or practicability of the railroad project, but will confine himself solely to determining how the Government's water rights may be conserved. whether the reclamation work can be prosecuted along established lines with or without the Sherar Bridge

Official announcement of what Mr. Henny's reco will probably not be available here until he has made his report to the department at Washington. It will take him a week at least to go over the surveys, prints, charts and other documentary evidence. His decision may be expected any time there-

Harriman officials have announced repeatedly that they will be ready to begin construction within a week after the Government has approved the railroad maps. This approval might be withheld some little time even after Henny's report has been transmitted and passed upon.
