Still They Come Headed for Crook

To bring the Hood river valley into direct communication with central Oregon and to connection with the Oregon Trunk Line's Deschutes road at a point in Crook county, owners of the Mount Hood Railroad company are now planning a 75 mile extension of the line, tapping the vast agricultural and timber regions south of Hood river valley.

W. H. Eccles of Hood River, president of the Hood River Railroad company, which operates trains between Hood River and Parkdale, Ore., a distance of 22 miles, is authority for the statement, says a Portland dispatch. "Just at present," said Mr. Eccles, "we have reached no final decision as to when work on the extension will be begun, but our plans are far enough along to warrant our saying work will begin very soon."

Several months ago, announcement was made that David Eccles of Utah, owner of the Sumpter valley road, proposed to extend his railroad to interior Oregon to connect with the extension to be made by the Mount Hood railroad.
