"See Holt's Kost Kutting Babies"

"Great Guns."

Probably all our readers are familiar with the high reputation of the J. Stevens Arms & Tool Co. and the line of guns and rifles which has made the name of "Stevens" famous. It is possible, however, that comparatively few realize the great strides toward perfection which are constantly being made.

Mr. John Browning, an inventor of international prominence, has designed what is now on the market as the Stevens Hammerless Repeating Shotgun, No. 520. It is so modern in its lines and so superior in its special features that a great popularity is assured for it.

This new gun is equally well adapted to trap or field work and is still further appreciated because of its very moderate cost. The barrel is of Stevens compressed forged steel, and is as strong as it is possible to make a shotgun barrel. It is 12 gauge and chambered to take a 2 1/2 inch shell. The finish is in black oxide which gives a beautiful and lasting appearance.

One of the most valuable features of this gun is that none of the interior parts protrude or interfere with the free and safe handling of it, while its simplicity makes it possible to take it down or put it together more quickly than any repeating gun on the market.

The slide handle, locking block, firing pin and safety device have each been the object of special study with the result that for general use the Stevens Repeating Shotgun No. 520, stands as the latest and the best contribution to the needs of the gunner.

Thousands of these unique pieces are already in use and are receiving the highest praise for certainty and ease of operation as well as for the extreme of convenience and satisfaction generally. Any of our readers who may be "thinking gun" may be helped to wise choice by the particulars regarding the new 520 model or any of the standard pieces made by this well-known firm by sending six cents in stamps to the J. Stevens Arms & Tool Company, Chicopee Falls, Mass. This covers postage on their free booklet which contains a lot of interesting matter for the sportsman.

A Plea for Normal School Training

Since the establishment of the first normal school in the state of New York in 1853, there has been a steady, persistent growth and development in the number of schools established in that state as well as throughout the United States, until there is no state in the Union that does not have normal training, save and except Oregon alone. This is an unenviable distinction. California, Idaho and Washington, her nearest neighbors, all generously maintain their normal schools. Many of the states, and most of the cities, require their teachers to have had training in a normal school. The rural schools in all the states are as justly entitled to this superior service, it is only denied them because of the scarcity of trained teachers, and the remedy in our state now lies with the people.

Every other state in the Union has from one to nineteen normal schools. This means that the normal school has passed the experimental stage, and has proved its worth and merits by the results. The public schools must have teachers, the supply must come from the eighth grade, the denominational schools, the state schools, or far better, from the properly equipped normal school, the right source. The teachers are required to handle the most difficult, delicate and intricate product of society, the child. The impressions a child receives at school are the most lasting. It stands to reason then, that a trained teacher will give the best returns to the state. The late U. S. Commissioner of education, W. T. Harris said, "The ordinary person sees results, but does not take note of the methods by which they are produced. Hence the teacher who has never received instruction in a normal school may happen to be a good teacher, but it is quite unusual for him to understand how he secures his own results; and he is often not able to profit by seeing the work of other good teachers."

The work done by the normal schools is not antagonistic to that of the state schools, the high schools or the denominational schools, because it is work peculiar to itself, in that it trains teachers only. The teachers in the public schools should be trained by the state wholly free from sectarian ideas.

By the method proposed in the initiative for the Monmouth Normal School, the question is taken wholly out of politics. It is fairly put up to the voters for their intelligent verdict.

Another fact, the teachers from the normal school returns a direct, immediate benefit to the state. To use his acquired skill and knowledge he must give the children the benefit, and in order to earn a livelihood, he must, and does, teach. Of the graduates of the Monmouth Normal, the record shows that ninety-five per cent have, and are teaching. In teaching he gives the children the direct benefit of his superior training and skill. The proposed cost for maintaining this school in the initiative bill now pending, is but the matter of a few cents to each taxpayer. If a man pays taxes on one thousand dollars, he will pay four cents a year to the support of the normal school. This money will be expended under direction of the one board of regents, with the secretary of state as the auditing official.

lection was much appreciated by all, as was Miss Maude Potter's impromptu "On the Three Classes of Grecian Architecture." The program closed with the critic's, (Miss Conway) report, which was appreciated, as it was the sort of criticism we all enjoy, commendatory rather than derogatory.

Juniors and Sophomores. Miss Wilda Nye, '12, spent last Saturday at her home on Bear Creek.

The Sophomore class have reason for congratulating themselves, as they were second highest in class averages for this month. They were beaten only by the seniors.

Mr. Elmer Martin, '12, visited his home at Culver last Saturday. Miss Lotta Smith, '11, spent a part of last week visiting at Laidlaw.

Miss Ethel Kidder has dropped her studies at the Crook County High School and has gone to Portland with her parents. Both her class and society are sorry to lose Miss Ethel, as she was one of the hopes of the Ochocoans for the coming oratorical contest.

Freshmen and Seniors. The freshmen class dropped from second last month to fourth in the monthly averages.

The seniors are displaying their class rings and they have cause to be proud of them, as they are especially unique and pretty.

The seniors still lead in the monthly averages. The general average for the class was 93.22.
