New Company Well Supported

The Portland management of the Oregon, Washington & Idaho Finance Company, which took over the old Columbia Southern Irrigation project, is receiving stronger support at the scene of operations than marked the inception of the company's regime. Several of the claim holders had taken a defiant attitude, and were making various demands upon the new concern. These were not frustrating work, as the new project is intended to cover only such of the old crowd as wanted to enter, but the hostile attitude was not pleasant says the Telegram. Citizens of Laidlaw and other settlers of the district have hastened forward with assurances of support since they learned of the opposition being offered by a few of the settlers. A resolution has been adopted by the Laidlaw Development League, welcoming the new management of the irrigation work, and assuring every possible cooperation in perfecting the plans approved by the Desert Land Board. Other business men of the district have written the Portland management deprecating the hasty criticism that had been voiced in the district, and giving assurance that they would use their full influence to see that the new investors were given a fair opportunity to build a reclamation system. The set of resolutions adopted by the Development League are in the following language:

"Whereas, it having been reported that certain criticisms had been made against the new management of the O. W. & I. F. Co., and as we believe it all premature and without any reasonable warrant whatever, therefore be it

"Resolved, that the Laidlaw Development League as a body assembled, do hereby express our regrets, and we do hereby assure the O. W. & I. F. Co. management that we sincerely deplore the fact that any such impressions may have been made. We offer the further assurance to the management of the O. W. & I. F. Co., that they shall have the hearty cooperation of this organization in any and every laudable enterprise which has for its aim the upbuilding of this community, and we hereby extend to them a welcome to meet with us and take part in our deliberations. J. N. B. Clerk, president. F. E. Dayton, Secretary."
