

Homeseekers

Coming In.

Central Oregon does not know how it is going to care for the people who will begin pouring into that section in a solid stream beginning tomorrow morning and continuing until about April 15, when the low rate colonist ticket sale ends.

The territory is plenty big to accommodate everyone coming here from the East, and eventually all who enter at this time will find comfortable homes and profitable occupation there. But the need of immediate accommodations is the problem confronting the people of Madras, Metolius, Redmond, Bend, Prineville and other points from which the homeseekers will radiate after reaching the far-famed productive state.

Information was received at Madras yesterday that 250 persons, all destined for that place, had left St. Paul on the first extra train run out of that city in connection with the reduced fares Friday evening. How to house and feed these new arrivals is the difficulty that the enterprising residents of Madras expect to overcome between this and the time the Oregon Trunk brings them into the rapid growing city. An order for tents and other equipment was received in Portland yesterday. These will be rushed to Madras at once.

The new hotel at Metolius is rapidly nearing completion, but will not be ready for occupancy until the colonist season is well under way. The accommodation at Madras is better now than at Metolius, and it is likely that a majority of the arrivals will stop at the former place until they can reach that part of Central Oregon which they have selected as their future homes.

Although Bend, Redmond and Prineville each expect to receive a great influx of Eastern land seekers, the situation at those places does not demand such urgent attention as at the towns on the Oregon Trunk over which nearly all travel will arrive.

To handle the traffic properly a new stage schedule has been established out of Madras and is arranged to connect with the Oregon Trunk trains. Although the railroad is not interested in the stage business, the tariff of rates has been published by the passenger department for the guidance of settlers. Automobile stages will leave Madras at 8 A. M. and at 9:30 P. M. daily, the fares to towns of the railroads being as follows: Culver Junction, $2; Hillman, $4.50; Prineville, $5; Redmond, $6; Laidlaw, $8; Bend, $8. Horse stages will leave at the same time, but as the travel is slower the fares, which are as follows, are lower: Hillman, $2; Prineville, $2.50; Redmond, $3.50; Laidlaw, $5; Bend, $5. These rates are not guaranteed, but are a reliable indication of what the newcomers may expect to pay. While the roads are in good condition they will continue in effect but should the weather necessitate additional equipment or cause delays in travel slight increase may be announced.

All reports from the East indicate that the bulk of tourists are determined to go to Central Oregon. The advice of the railroads and of the various community publicity bureaus seems to have been adopted, as full 90 per cent of travelers express the intention of locating on farms.

While many coaches are filled with men traveling alone with nothing but their personal baggage, many others are bringing their families. They have disposed of their Eastern homes, severed all connections and are determined to seek new locations in Oregon. Some are bringing their household goods, farm machinery and livestock. According to the advices of passenger agents who have conferred with the West-bound army, many men are coming alone for the purpose of selecting a place that is suitable for a home with the intention of sending for their families after they become settled.

The residents of Central Oregon are eager for the arrival of the first train bringing homeseekers. They purpose to help them and have sent out assurances that they are well able to care for all. They realize that people is what they need more than anything else, and promise to offer inducements that will satisfy the tourists.—Oregonian.
