

OUR PAPERMAKERS.

America's First Mill and the Vast Present Day Industry.

In the United States today the manufacture of paper ranks third in magnitude among the great industries. The trade directories show 733 firms operating 756 paper and 240 pulp mills, representing an invested capital of over $278,000,000 and employing directly upward of 100,000 laborers, producing approximately a product of 4,000,000 tons annually.

New England, in which almost a third of the country's paper mills are located, has played an important part in this wonderful development. While the first paper mill in America was established at Germantown, Pa., in 1690, the early settlers of New England soon recognized the advantages which their location offered for the manufacture of paper, and as early as 1730 Daniel Henchman, a Boston stationer, had erected a small paper mill at Milton, Mass. At this time paper was made entirely of rags.

When the Revolution broke out paper was still very scarce, and in 1776 the house of representatives resolved that the committees of correspondence, inspection and safety in the several towns be required to appoint some suitable person in each town to receive rags for the paper mills, and the inhabitants were directed to be very careful in saving even the smallest quantity of rags suitable for making paper.

Up to this time and even as late as the early part of the last century the process of manufacturing paper was carried on entirely by hand. In the earliest stages, after the pulp from which the sheets of paper was to be made had been reduced to the proper consistency in a tub or vat, it was dipped out in molds made of rushes confined in a frame, and in this frame the pulp was shaken out in a thin layer, the water filtering through the rushes leaving a well formed sheet of paper thereon.

These separate sheets were afterward taken from the mold and pressed out and dried. Great dexterity and practice were needed by the papermaker in order to produce a sheet of paper of uniform thickness and texture, the result being accomplished by imparting a shaking motion to the frame containing the pulp.

Holyoke, Mass., manufactures more paper than any other city in the world. Lawrence is another great paper town. It was here that the problem of educating newspaper publishers to the use of paper made of mechanically ground wood pulp was successfully worked out. There are about 150 mills abroad which still make paper by hand, but the process has practically been abandoned in this country.—New England Advance.

A Painted Centipede.

An amusing practical joke played on the guests of a certain tea party is described by a painter of still life. He says: "Once a patron brought me six saucers and a card upon which was pinned a large centipede, or 'thousand legs,' requesting me to copy it exactly upon each of the saucers so that the base of the cup would cover it. I did so. Afterward he told me that he had given a little tea party and without the knowledge of his wife had substituted the painted saucers for the plain ones. His amusement consisted in observing the horrified expression on the faces of the guests when they raised their cups and the quickness with which they put them down again to keep the monster imprisoned. It was only when the hostess noticed that none of the guests drank their tea that the deception was discovered."

Rice Chocolate Pie.

A delicious rice chocolate pie is made as follows: A quart of milk is scalded and then mixed with the yolks of two eggs, four tablespoonfuls of boiled rice that has been pressed through a sieve, two squares of melted chocolate and a cupful of sugar. Stir in a double boiler until the custard thickens slightly and bake in one crust. When it is done put on a meringue made with the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs and a little confectioner's sugar and dropped over the pie from the tip of a teaspoon. Brown slightly in a quick oven.

How Far the Blood Travels.

The mileage of the blood circulation reveals some astonishing facts. It has been calculated, for instance, that, assuming the heart to beat sixty-nine times a minute at ordinary pressure, the blood goes at the rate of 207 yards in a minute, or nine miles an hour, 220 miles a day and 80,000 miles a year. If a man eighty-four years old could have had one single blood corpuscle floating in his blood all his life it would have traveled in that time nearly 7,000,000 miles.—London Globe.

HIS LAST JUMP.

The Feat That Ended the Daring Career of Sam Patch.

In the early part of the last century Sam Patch was quite a prominent figure. His astonishing exhibitions at leaping made his name famous from one end of the country to the other, and in those days the expression "As crazy as Sam Patch" or "You act like Sam Patch" was very common. Sam Patch in those days was a sort of symbol or synonym of recklessness or daredevilry.

Sam Patch was born in Rhode Island, went to sea in early life and afterward settled in Paterson, N. J., where he was a cotton spinner. Because of his threats to jump from a bridge over the Passaic river he was finally placed under arrest. A few months afterward the successful performance of the feat gave him such widespread notoriety that he traveled about, leaping from the yardarms or topmasts of ships.

Sam died young, but during his comparatively short life he gained great distinction of a certain kind. This high jumping idiosyncrasy amounted to a mania with Sam, and as his feats were accomplished before the day of prizefighters, foot racers or balloonists he was regarded as a marvelous athlete.

After his Passaic river jump his next most famous jump was at Niagara falls from a slanting rock midway between the highest point on Goat island and the water, and he achieved this successfully. After a few more leaps of less heights he announced that on a certain date he would jump from the bank of the Genesee river at Rochester, N. Y., into the water below the falls, a distance of 125 feet.

A great crowd gathered to witness the performance. Sam made the jump on Nov. 13, 1829, but it was his last. On this occasion he seemed to lose control of himself, doubled up and struck the water broadside. It is probable the impact killed him, though some said that in trying to swim ashore under the cataract he became entangled in the roots of a large tree and was drowned.

There is, however, no contemporaneous evidence that he was seen alive after striking the water. His body was found after several months near the mouth of the Genesee river and was buried there.—St. Louis Republic.

Did Her Best.

A little girl sat in a doctor's office waiting patiently until her mother's turn came to go to the dentist's chair. The room was filled with patients, for it was the common waiting room for four doctors. Every one sat and watched the child, who smiled at each in turn, beginning at the right and going around in a circle. She received some pleasant responses at first, but finally they grew scarce. Nothing daunted, she kept right on making grimaces until her mother in exasperation said:

"Julia, what are you doing?"

"Don't I have to, mother?" And the little maid pointed to a sign tacked up over the stenographer's desk. "Keep on Smiling."—Lippincott's.

Preferred Her Playing.

A Boston lady once asked Professor Blackenstein what made him so thoughtful.

"I have been wondering, madam," he replied, "how you can make the piano talk so divinely and yourself so foolishly."

"Ah, well," she replied, "the piano knows it has only me to listen to, whereas I know I have only you to listen to me, which makes the difference."

"I pray you," said the professor, "play again. I like your playing best."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

He Knew a Thing or Two.

Anaxagoras, the Athenian philosopher who flourished in the fifth century before Christ, taught his scholars that wind was air set in motion by rarefaction, that the moon owed her light giving properties to the sun, that the rainbow was the resulting phenomenon of reflection, that comets were wandering stars and that the fixed stars were at an immeasurable distance beyond the sun, besides giving them many other ideas thought to belong to more modern times.

A Knowing Pupil.

A Yankee inspector of schools was testing the knowledge of a class on the value of coins. He pulled out a half dollar, threw it lightly from one hand to the other and asked a pupil:

"Well, now, what is that?"

"Heads, sir," came from a youngster in front.—Lippincott's.

Tested.

"Miss Gladys has a very engaging disposition, hasn't she?"

"Quite so. Her present fiancé is her fourth this season."—Baltimore American.
