

PREVENTING HOG CHOLERA

A government experiment station is issued the following bulletin on hog cholera, in which it lays out good methods for preventing the disease. Proper methods of feeding and care are necessary in order to keep the herd in a healthy, growing condition. Healthy hogs possess a slight degree of resistance against disease, and this factor plays no small part in the control of hog cholera. Filthy, crowded quarters, lack of exercise and wrong methods of feeding overcome natural immunity and are secondary factors in the spread of disease.

There is no place on a farm where disinfectants are so necessary as in the hog houses and yards. White-wash, lime, chloride of lime and stock dips are the disinfectants commonly used. Pastures and lots may be cleaned up by moving the hogs for a few months each year and cleaning away all litter. The manure should be put to good use if plowed and sowed to some forage crop.

Necessary precautions against the food and drinking water becoming contaminated must be observed. The importance of clean water, clean feed and clean troughs and feeding doors should be emphasized. Muddy yards when in use a few years become filthy and endanger the health of the herd.

FEEDING THE PIGS.

Peculiarities of Animals' Structure Necessitate Concentrated Foods.
A small stomach and an extensive intestinal canal are peculiarities of the pig's structure which have to be considered in the matter of feeding in the opinion of a prominent swine herder. The smallness of the stomach indicates the necessity of concentrated food, and the large intestinal canal points to the fact that a large quantity of food can be disposed of.

Recent experiments have shown that fattening pigs should be fed at least three times a day, and a third meal, given as late in the evening as possible, should be the heaviest. The roots which suit pigs best are sweet potatoes and carrots.

Carrots for Cattle.
Those who have one or two cows and a piece of ground that may be tilled should not fail to sow a few rows of half long carrot seed. If sown by hand the seed should be scattered so as to make a row of a couple of inches apart. They may be sown fifteen to sixteen inches apart. Keep them clean, but do not thin them when the seed has been prudently sown. When autumn comes the amount of good food furnished will be a matter of surprise. Until freezing weather the carrots may be simply pulled up and fed without chopping or slicing.

Alfalfa is Excellent Feed.
Alfalfa is an excellent feeding stuff where it can be obtained. Hogs relish it either when green or when it has been properly cured for hay. It is very helpful if the brood sow has access to pasture. It not only helps provide the proper food, but it affords a place for exercise which is very essential.

SHE WAS INQUISITIVE.

But Didn't Fool Her Neighbor, Whose Inning Will Come Later.
"I do not like her at all," said the suburban woman apropos of her new neighbor. "I think she is the sort that moves into a place and tries to force a casual acquaintance into an intimate friendship before the month is out."

"Why do you think so?" asked the patient listener.
"Because of this incident," resumed the suburbanite. "The day they arrived I met her on the lawn and after saying 'Good morning' asked her if she was getting settled. She said she was, and that ended the first conversation. I spoke to her several times after that, but I didn't call. These across the lawn pleasantries are useful in that they give you a chance to get acquainted without committing yourself to a formal visit."

"You don't mean to say she called first?" asked the patient one.
"Officially, no. She appeared suddenly in our living room, saying she found the door open, and, hearing voices, 'had just come up,' and she asked if she might use our telephone. Oh, yes; she had one of her own, but she explained she was about to call up an agency to get a new girl and didn't want the present incumbent to know she was about to be supplanted."

"Did she get the girl?" asked the still patient one.
"Of course she didn't," answered the outraged suburbanite. "She has that identical girl yet, and all the time she was talking to the agency and demanding a culinary angel at moderate rates her eagle eye was taking in the bare spots in the carpet and the scratches on John's desk."

Pansing for breath and averting threatened apoplexy, she concluded: "When the decorators go and the curtains are hung I'll deliberately ask that woman to call. Having seen us at our worst, she will be permitted to see us at our best, after which—to paraphrase a famous governor—it will be a long time between visits."—New York Press.

A Story of Thackeray.
There is a story of Thackeray shortly after the publication of "Vanity Fair" dining with a friend and receiving an introduction to his next neighbor, "Captain Crawley of the Life Guards." Thackeray looked greatly annoyed, scarcely opened his lips to this gentleman and afterward told his host in an aggrieved tone that he liked a joke as well as any man, but there was a time and a place for all things. No joking allusion to a character of his novel had, however, been designed or perpetrated. The fellow guest actually was a Captain Crawley and held a commission in the Life Guards.

Disraeli and the Cabman.
To be recognized by a cabman sets the seal on fame. Disraeli was really and truly famous. Lady Dorothy Nevill calls to mind a Beaconsfield boast. He was getting into a hansom when the driver opened the trapdoor. "I know who you are, sir," he said. "I have read all your books, bar 'Lothair.'" But there is a reverse to every medal. Beaconsfield once suffered a setback. "I walked with Gladstone on Tuesday," wrote Lord Houghton, "and when he left me a gentleman came up and said, 'Might I ask if that was Mr. Disraeli?' Such is fame."—London Chronicle.

Happy Thought.
"Your story is good," said the publisher to the author who had called to learn his fate, "but there is one thing about it that I can't understand."
"What's that?" queried the author.
"You have the climax in the middle chapter instead of the last," said the publisher. "Why is that?"
"Oh," answered the author, "that is a little scheme of mine to keep women from knowing how the story is going to turn out by reading the last chapter first!"—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

"Smoking Tobacco."
The earliest instance known of penalizing smoking in the streets is in the court books of the mayor of Methwold, in England. There is the following entry on the record of the court held Oct. 14, 1695: "We agree that any person that is taken smoking tobacco in the street shall forfeit one shilling for every time so taken, and it shall be lawful for the petty constables to distrain for the same, for to be put to the uses above said. We present Nicholas Barber for smoking in the street and do amerce him one shilling."
